

Koshino House - Built in 1981, extended in 1984, by world renowned Japanese architect Tadao Ando. It was designed in such a way to maximize light inside the home while avoiding the tree's on the perimeter of the site. The curvature addition to the top of the scaled plan is the extension, Tadao was commissioned to add this three years following the completion of the build.

This an online render of the building, you can see the minimalist ideas clearer here. Koshino House — Jeremy D Morton (no date). <https://www.jeremydmorton.com/koshino-house>.

The narrow slits are designed to add a dramatic sense of space along the corridors. Along this corridor is seven bedrooms, along with the master bedroom in a seperate location. This makes this property an eight bedroom, three bathroom masterpiece.
