Critical Thinking

What is Critical thinking?

(Glaser, E. Cotterell, S, 2008) believes the definition of Critical thinking to be “Critical thinking calls for a persistent effort to examine and belief or supposed form of knowledge in the light of the evidence that supports it and the further conclusions to which it tends”

Inference

Inferences are a natural act of your own mind. We make inferences on every bit of information that we process. These are our natural conclusions. Its only when we infer something we can then pick it apart to find logical theories and distinguish fallacies.

Open Mindedness

Open mindedness is to consider the viewpoints of another person and have the ability to analyse the piece of information given without judgement or prejudice and to allow your mind to adapt the thought process in light of new evidence supporting a different idea than initially thought.

Analysis

Being critical, or criticising doesn't refer only to finding negative points in a piece of work, it also refers to finding strengths, positives and supporting theories for a method to form an overall judgment (evaluation) of a source.

Reflection

The most important skill to enhance your learning. It is a fundamental process in your personal and professional progression. Reflection is the art or critiquing what has not worked very well and what has been most effective.
