Reflective Model

- Gibbs reflective cycle was developed in 1988
- It was developed to create a clear structures to help turn experiences into practical learning and improvement .

Slide 3

Task 1: Self-Evaluation

Strengths

- I am a quick learner.
- I am a hard worker
- I have good communications skills
- I am good at working by myself

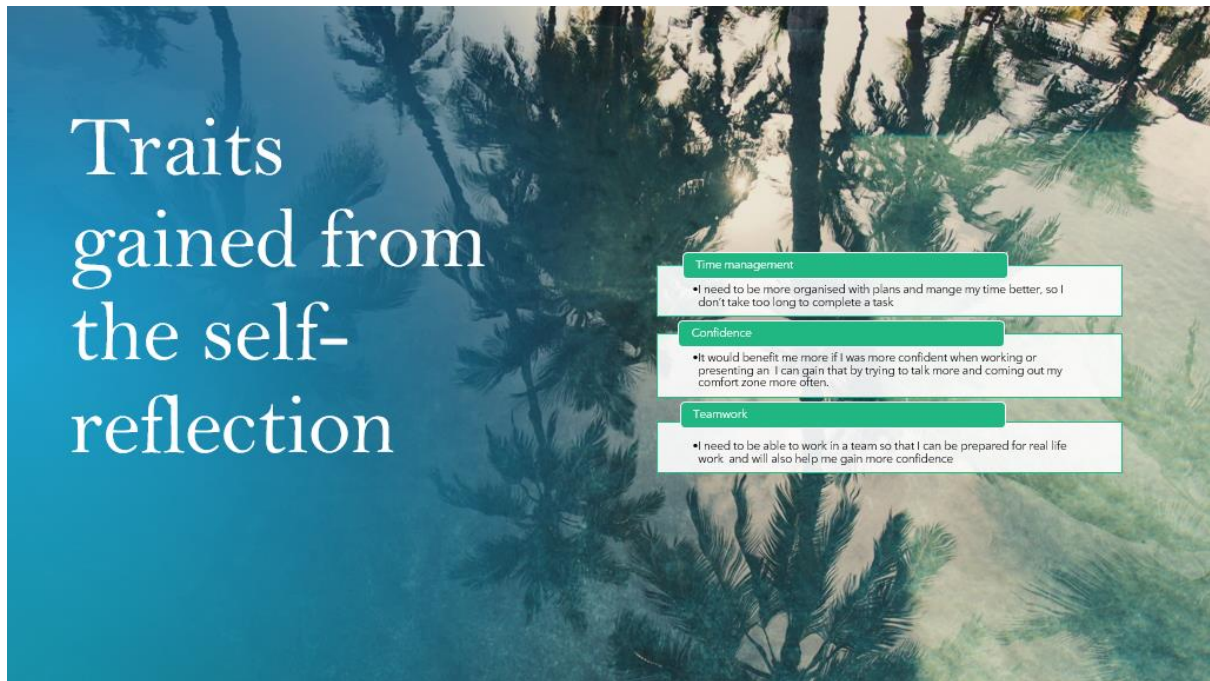

Weaknesses

- My time Management skill needs to be improved.
- I tend to overthink a lot
- I am not confident when working
- I am not good at working in a team

I have many strength and weakness one of my strengths is that I am good at doing individual work without any problems and I can complete the work without delay analysis. However, one of my weaknesses is that I struggle to work in a team because I prefer to work alone and do my own work the way I like it without other people input which makes it hard to work with others.

Slide 4

Traits gained from the self-reflection

- Time management
 - need to be more organised with plans and manage my time better, so I don't take too long to complete a task
- Confidence
 - It would benefit me more if I was more confident when working or presenting as I can gain that by trying to talk more and coming out my comfort zone more often.
- Teamwork
 - need to be able to work in a team so that I can be prepared for real life work and will also help me gain more confidence

Task 3: forming a team

Forming a team using Tuckman's model

- This stage is when you are most excited and motivated to work with each other while also feeling nervous because you do not know how well you will work with each other.
- This is the first stage out of five that is used in Tuckman's model and in this stage the people in the groups are trying to understand their roles within the group while also ensuring they make a good impression on each other while trying not to offend anyone with their lack of trust and boundaries.
