When creating my website, I wanted to create an easy, accessible website as I find that certain websites can be incredibly confusing at times and I just wanted it to be simple and easy. I want each body of work to have its own section and for the work to be seen on its own. I do not have an aesthetic that I stick to a different aesthetic each time I feel like having an aesthetic is a restriction to what I want to create as I feel like "everything is everywhere" with me and I like to make that apart of who I am as an artist just incredibly disorganized and a huge procrastinator with an impulsive mind. I adore colour schemes, but I felt as each one of my works featured have such a wide range of colour that I felt like the white background is what made each project stand out the most and the only colour to do so. The websites that have inspired me to create my own have been

I didn't really take much inspiration from anybody as I feel I do not really know myself at all and that I am trying to find me and with each version that passes I feel like I'm never truly me so I wanted to attempt to find what is me, what I want to add to each section and what projects I want to add. But the two links above are what I wanted to achieve or have something similar too just easy, not much writing, have the images speak for themselves and overall simple to navigate for everybody. I found it hard to write an artist statement being so positive about myself and to speak about myself without it being incredibly negative but I managed to write something that I feel describes me the most and with each version of me that passes I will be able to change or add to it as I used Adobe Express to create my website I choose a template which I thought suited what I was going for and just added the works that I felt were my best and I'm hoping to add more as time goes on but for now I feel confident with the work featured and that it is my best work and each section hopefully shows that.
