This is a well written essay, and you utilise the primary reading material in a successful manner revealing knowledge & understanding of some of the main issues arising from this wide-ranging question. That said the essay would have benefited from an in-depth discussion of the distinction between positive & negative freedom - 'freedom to' & 'freedom from'. This would open the way into a discussion of, for eg, whether Hobbes promotes only negative & Rousseau, positive, freedom. There are some bits of your essay/phrases that have a plagiarised 'feel'.

It is important to be fully aware of your sources and the wording other authors use - if necessary, insert quotation marks to indicate the words of another author. We will chat about this on the phone; that will enable me to explain the last comment (above) in more detail.
