Monologue Choice: Darcey's monologue from 'Crouch, Touch, Pause, Engage' by Robin Soans. This monologue is about Darcey's attempted suicide and is also a harsh reality check for news reporters who exploit young people and how it affects them. A look back at the Bridgend suicides which are important to me being a girl whose grown up in Bridgend. I've really enjoyed working on this piece as it is very raw and challenging.

Monologue Choice: The monologue is taken from the movie "Spy" by Paul Feig and readapted to underline my multicultural background and the benefits which come with it including speaking more than one language. The tempo-rhythm which inhabits the character is analogous to the drive and determination which pin my personal life which I thought to be a decent quality to show the audience in order to convey myself effectively.

Monologue choice: I will be performing Angela's monologue from 'Like a virgin' by Gordan Steel. I chose this piece as I believe it to be exceptionally powerful, possessing a great deal of emotionality. The topics expressed by Angela, the 15-year-old girl, are incredibly poignant, often directly impacting the reader due to their deeply real and uncomfortable nature.

Monologue Choice: Jim from "The Glass Menagerie" by Tennessee Williams. I really enjoyed the confection that Jim has throughout the play, and how there's so many ways to show all of those emotions and confessions in such a short piece.

Monologue Choice: I chose a duologue called Rambo-Ella because I'm looking into being a stunt double as well as an actress, so this is a good way to showcase both skills. I can also relate to my character, having been in a similar situation myself.

Monologue Choice: Playing the character of Carlyle from 'Song from a forgotten city' by Ed Thomas who is looking back to a time where he was in a pub during a Wales and England rugby match. Carlyle is witty and heroic but is also mentally unstable, and after being defeated by the English, the whole crowd at the pub oddly forgets how to sing. Being an incredibly proud Welsh man, I feel I connect with this character.
