Which digital tool is most commonly used for collaboration at UWTSD?

The most common digital tool used to collaborate at UWTSD is online teaching and learning e.g. teams. In certain circumstances online lectures can be delivered from home or away from campus. As we experienced throughout the global pandemic of coronavirus which has affected worldwide, online teaching and learning has been used most effectively and has still enabled students to gain the highest level of study possible. Students have been able to virtually access timetabled lectures and computer lab sessions whilst they could not attend campus in person. This also gives students the ability to maintain their learning and also gives them the flexibility in uncertain circumstances in the comfort of their own home.

Teams

As part of the scheduled online teaching most courses would be using teams. This is an invaluable tool for communication and collaboration. This allows you to connect with individuals and groups across the university whether this is through video, messaging or within discussions to share content and access other apps. All UWTSD students and staff will have access to Microsoft teams enabling you to join or create your own teams with others. Providing one easy access with all office 365 applications joined with Microsoft teams you can directly integrate applications such as SharePoint, planner and stream.

Teams

Collaborate: Is where individuals work together to achieve a common purpose

Group chat: Send instant messages and chat with multiple people

Online virtual meetings & lectures: Collaboration technique where groups share ideas using video and audio

Share: Your screen, PowerPoint presentations, programs, ideas and many more

Audio calls: High quality voice calls with individuals and groups

Assignments: Support and discuss assignments with your student group or lecturer
