While there are hundreds of different reasons and circumstances why someone or families become homeless, the results are the same. As previously stated, homelessness affects all aspects of the person's or child's life. Made more difficult by cultural factors and society values. Beliefs that are shared by the majority and thought to be normal can guide the behaviors of others. This can affect how individuals experience homelessness or are treated during homelessness. Society looks at homelessness negatively and with miss conceptions.

This can lead to homeless individuals being subjected to negative stereotypes, derogatory language and societal exclusion, which can impact their self-esteem and social connections. They may also struggle to find employment due to a lack of resources, encounter difficulties accessing basic services like healthcare, bank accounts and education due to their housing status and lack of a fixed address.

Although the implications for people who are homeless are difficult to deal with. The implications for the UK government are also worrying. With our NHS already struggling Annual NHS expenditure on homeless individuals: £4,298 per person. And Mental health services for homeless individuals: £2,099 per person. Much of which could have been avoided if they had been given a stable residence sooner.

With the discrimination and implications of homelessness on the future generations and the government, the number of people classed as homeless needs to be reduced. According to Homewards- Public Perceptions 73% of people agree we don't pay enough attention to ending homelessness. While the latest figures in Wales from 2023 show that 3,346 children under the age of 16 are living in temporary accommodation.
