

Blog 5 Reflection of Module

After completion of the group project, I found the most positive experience was working in a group while bonding and getting to know each other better by engaging in daily conversations via WhatsApp to share ideas with each member. My strength was offering help where I can, and aid others to progress with work and keep everyone motivated and asking for feedback on work completed. The negatives were when a member missed lectures they would fall behind and as other group members were working, sometimes it would be hard to communicate instantly and offer help in catching up however, we did eventually overcome this as members would reply a few hours later or they would tell us when they are free to update.

Also, it was interesting to identify stakeholders as they are not just investors, they can be anyone from potential customers to local organisations, by using tools such as a quad chart enabled me to see what the purpose is for an organisation to a project, who customers or stakeholders are to how to measure success. As the presentation drew the project to a close, we did push each other to get tasks completed on time as the team leader would need to compile the PowerPoint slides and after a few alterations, we all got to a point where we were happy with everything.
