Common Assessment Criteria Applied	Marks Available	Marks Awarded
General Comments
For your first JS enabled website, you have embraced your hobby into a working website and have demonstrated that you can develop interactive elements e.g., data validation. However, if you have read the rubric carefully, you will see that you have missed elements i.e. jQuery feature. For completeness, the rubric is also clear with regards to the approach to development and not a discussion on "I completed a feature" here's the final code - its all about the development path from start to finish	100	67

2. Knowledge and Understanding Skills
Upon examining the supplied JS codebase - some elements have limited annotation, but is effective. However, if you examine you JS on the forms data validation - it is somewhat excessive, is a reason for this ?	15	12
3. Cognitive and Intellectual Skills
As per rubric - this is all about your approach to developing a JS/jQuery solution. I do appreciate that you have described elements with "working" code, but this should be all about the foundation of an idea i.e., elements within the site and documenting its development path until its implementation or as they say "a missed opportunity"	15	7
4. Practical Application Skills
Not a bad attempt at a JS enabled website, JS elements around data entry/validation are fine (check password error message - misleading). Other features that rotate images on click are fine. But there is no jQuery on this site - see rubric (no marks awarded)	70	48
5. Transferable Skills for Life and Professional Practice
