SCREEN PRINTS

Screen print using two shades of blue ink on a splattered background

Screen print using two shades of blue ink

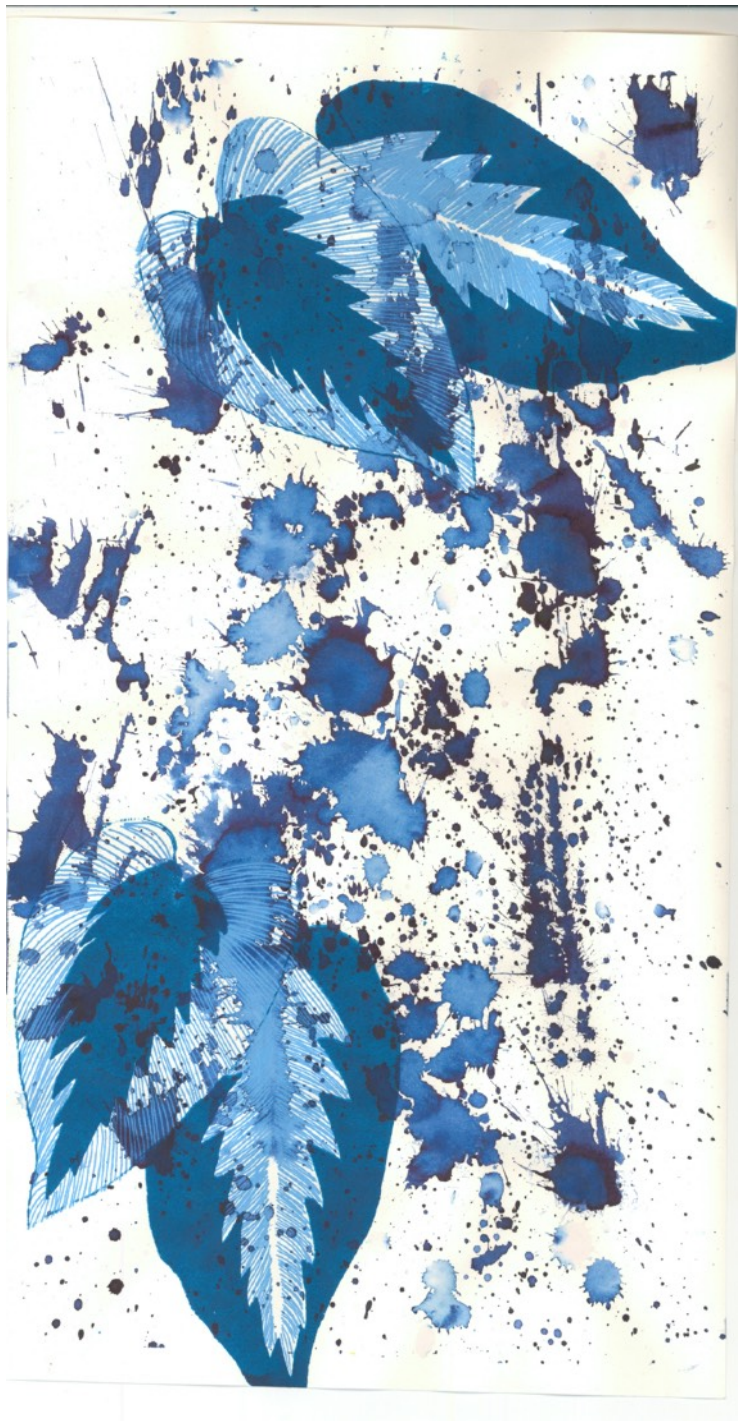

Screen print using light and dark blue foil

This is one of my favourite screen prints. Apart from the middle leaf being slightly miss alined, the over all look of the print looks good. The colours work well together, I like how sharp the blue looks. As the blue ink was made with the transparent binder, the lines from the background has come through giving it something extra visually.

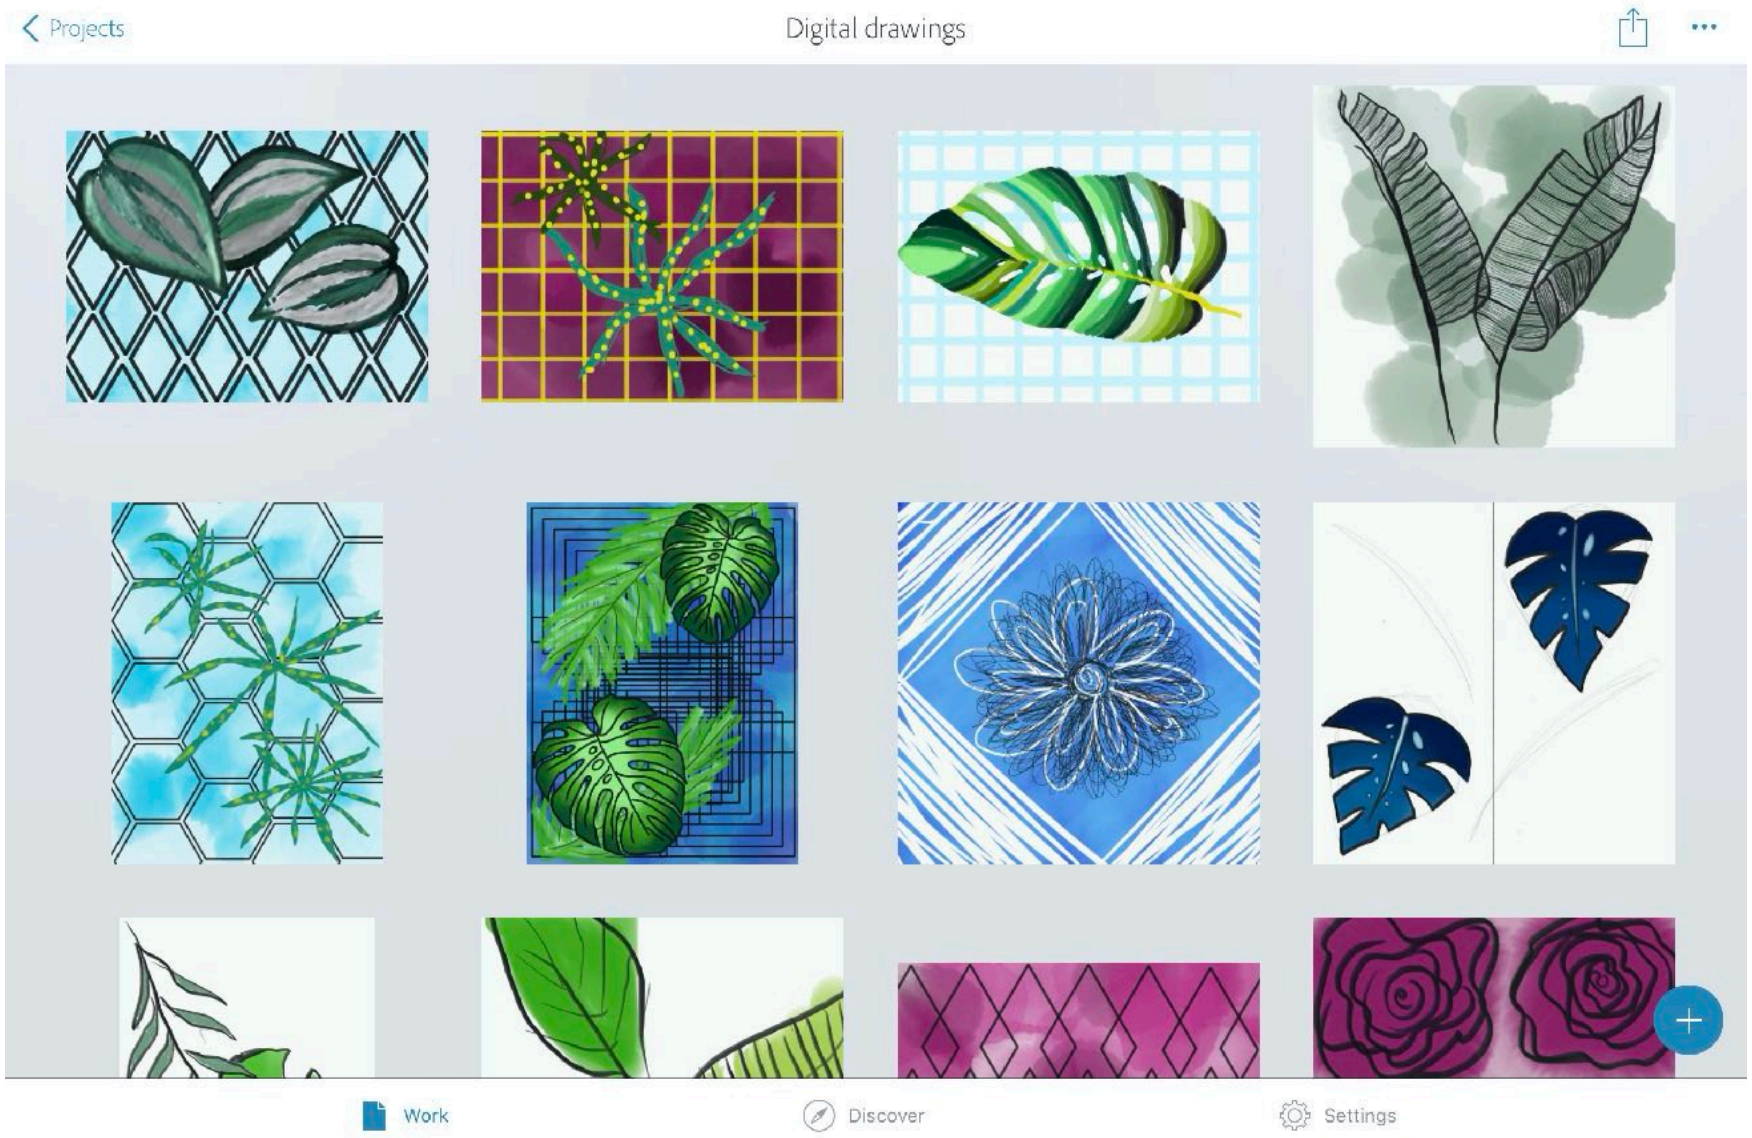

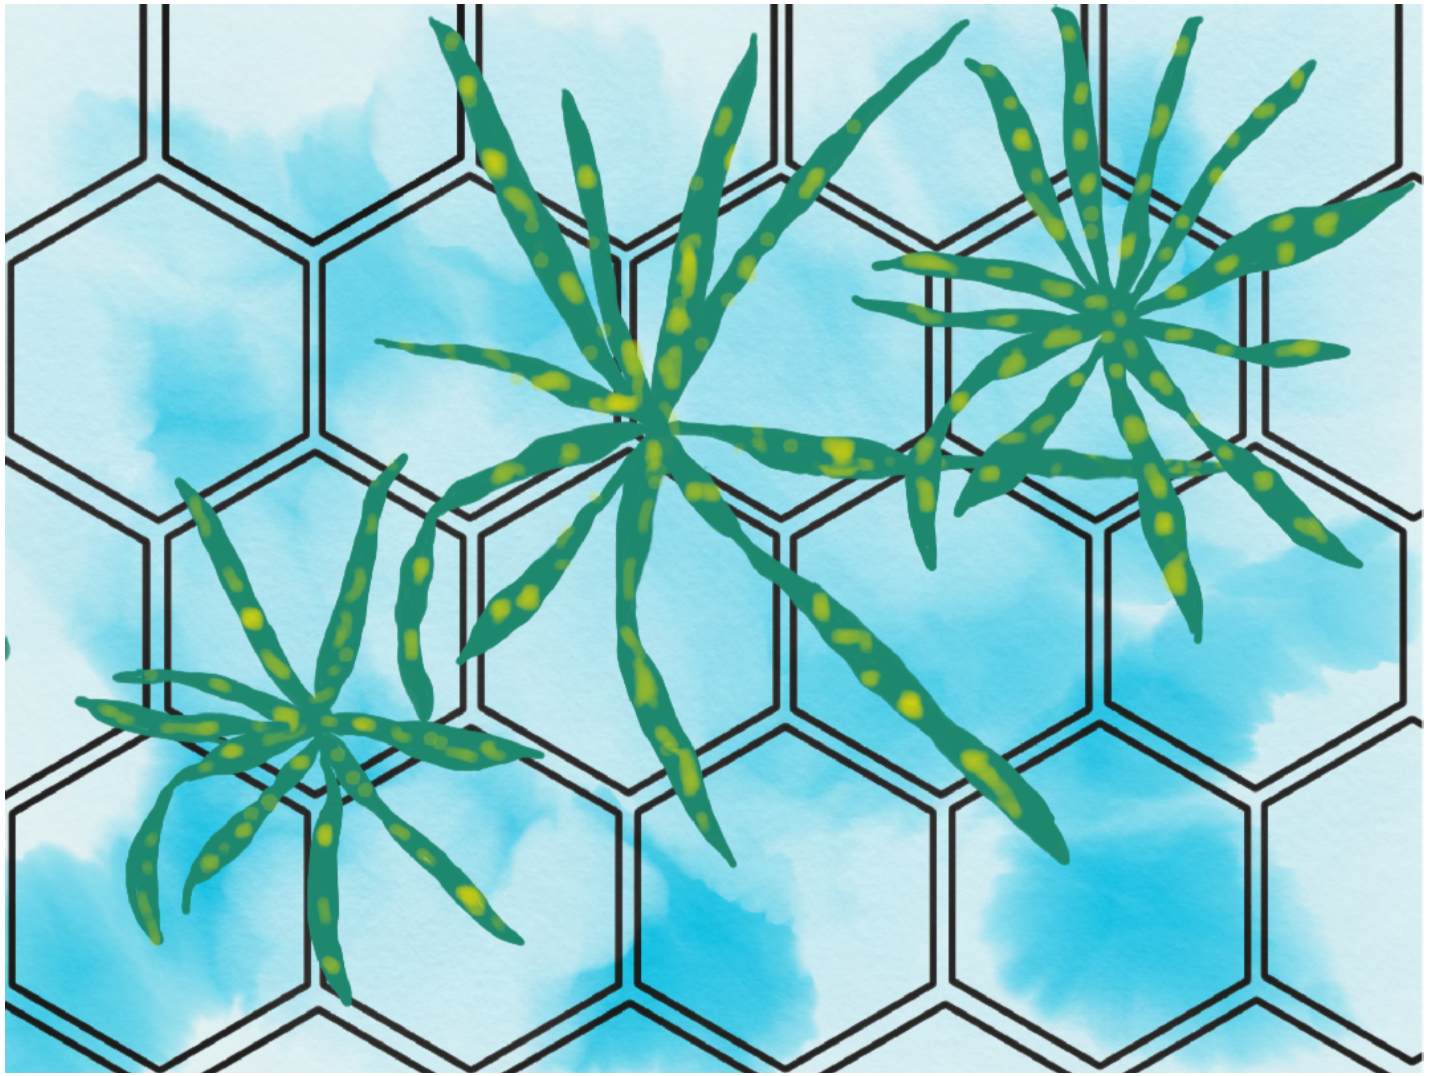

Like the previous screen print the inks from the background has come through giving the print a more interesting final look. The one disappointing thing from this print is the placement, I should have centred them. This would have allowed the whole image to fit onto the paper. Otherwise the alinement of the two sections have come out really well.

Digital drawing

During lockdown, I attempted to do some digital drawings. Before I was able to get into Photoshop I used Adobe Sketch. I liked how the geometric shapes in the background looked with some botanical image on top. I also played around with the watercolour brush to add colour in a more interesting way.

Digital designs

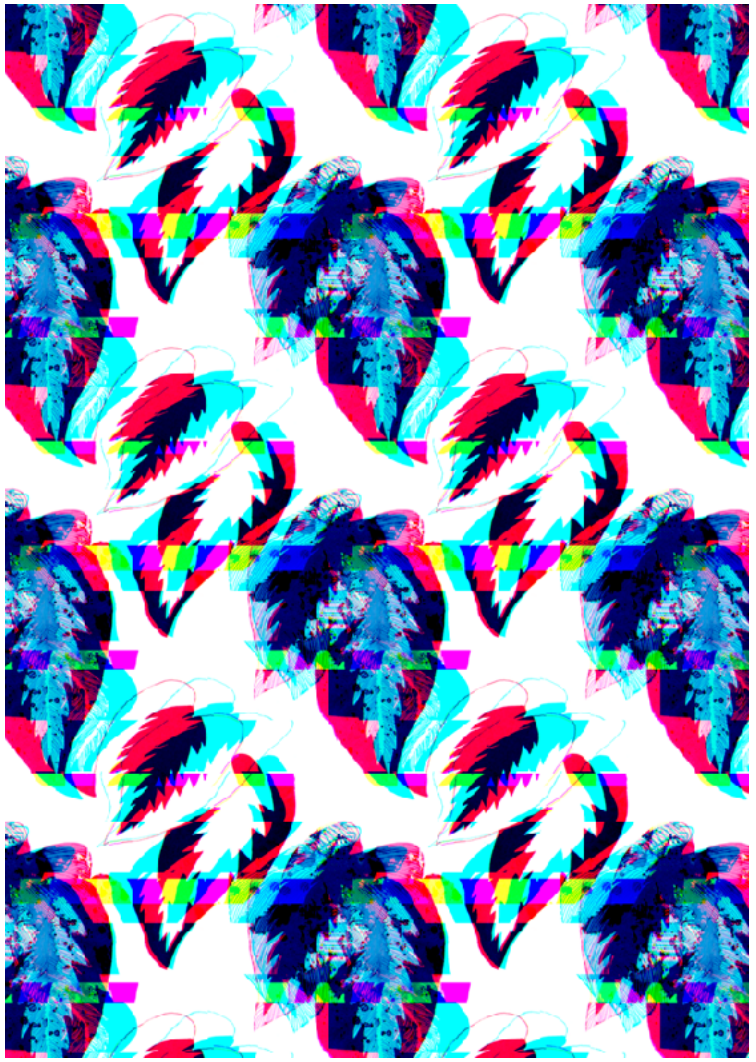

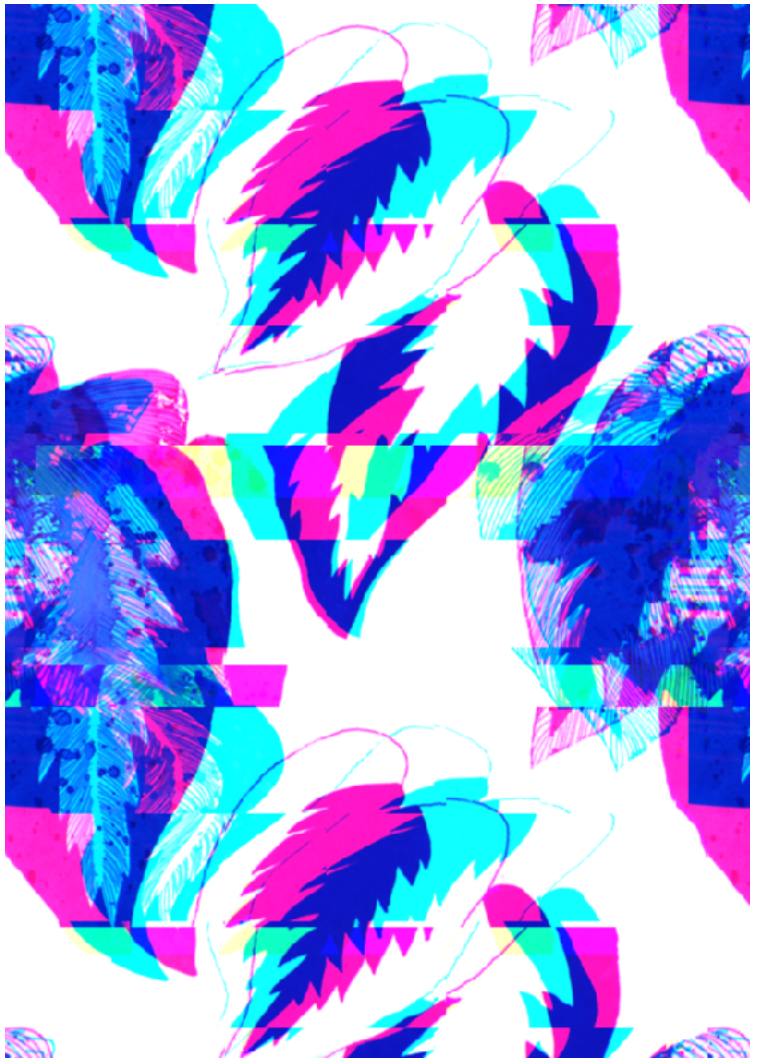

Three different colour ways and three different scales

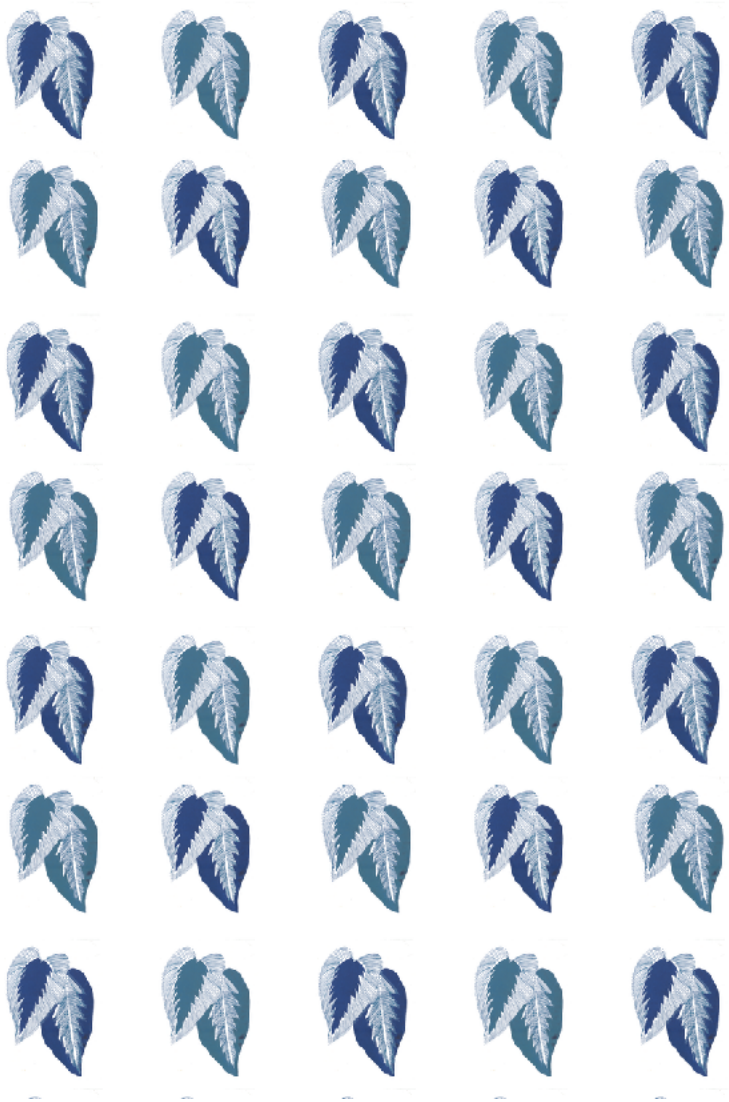

Glitched effect, three different colour ways and three different scales

More digital repeat patterens

Digital visual edits

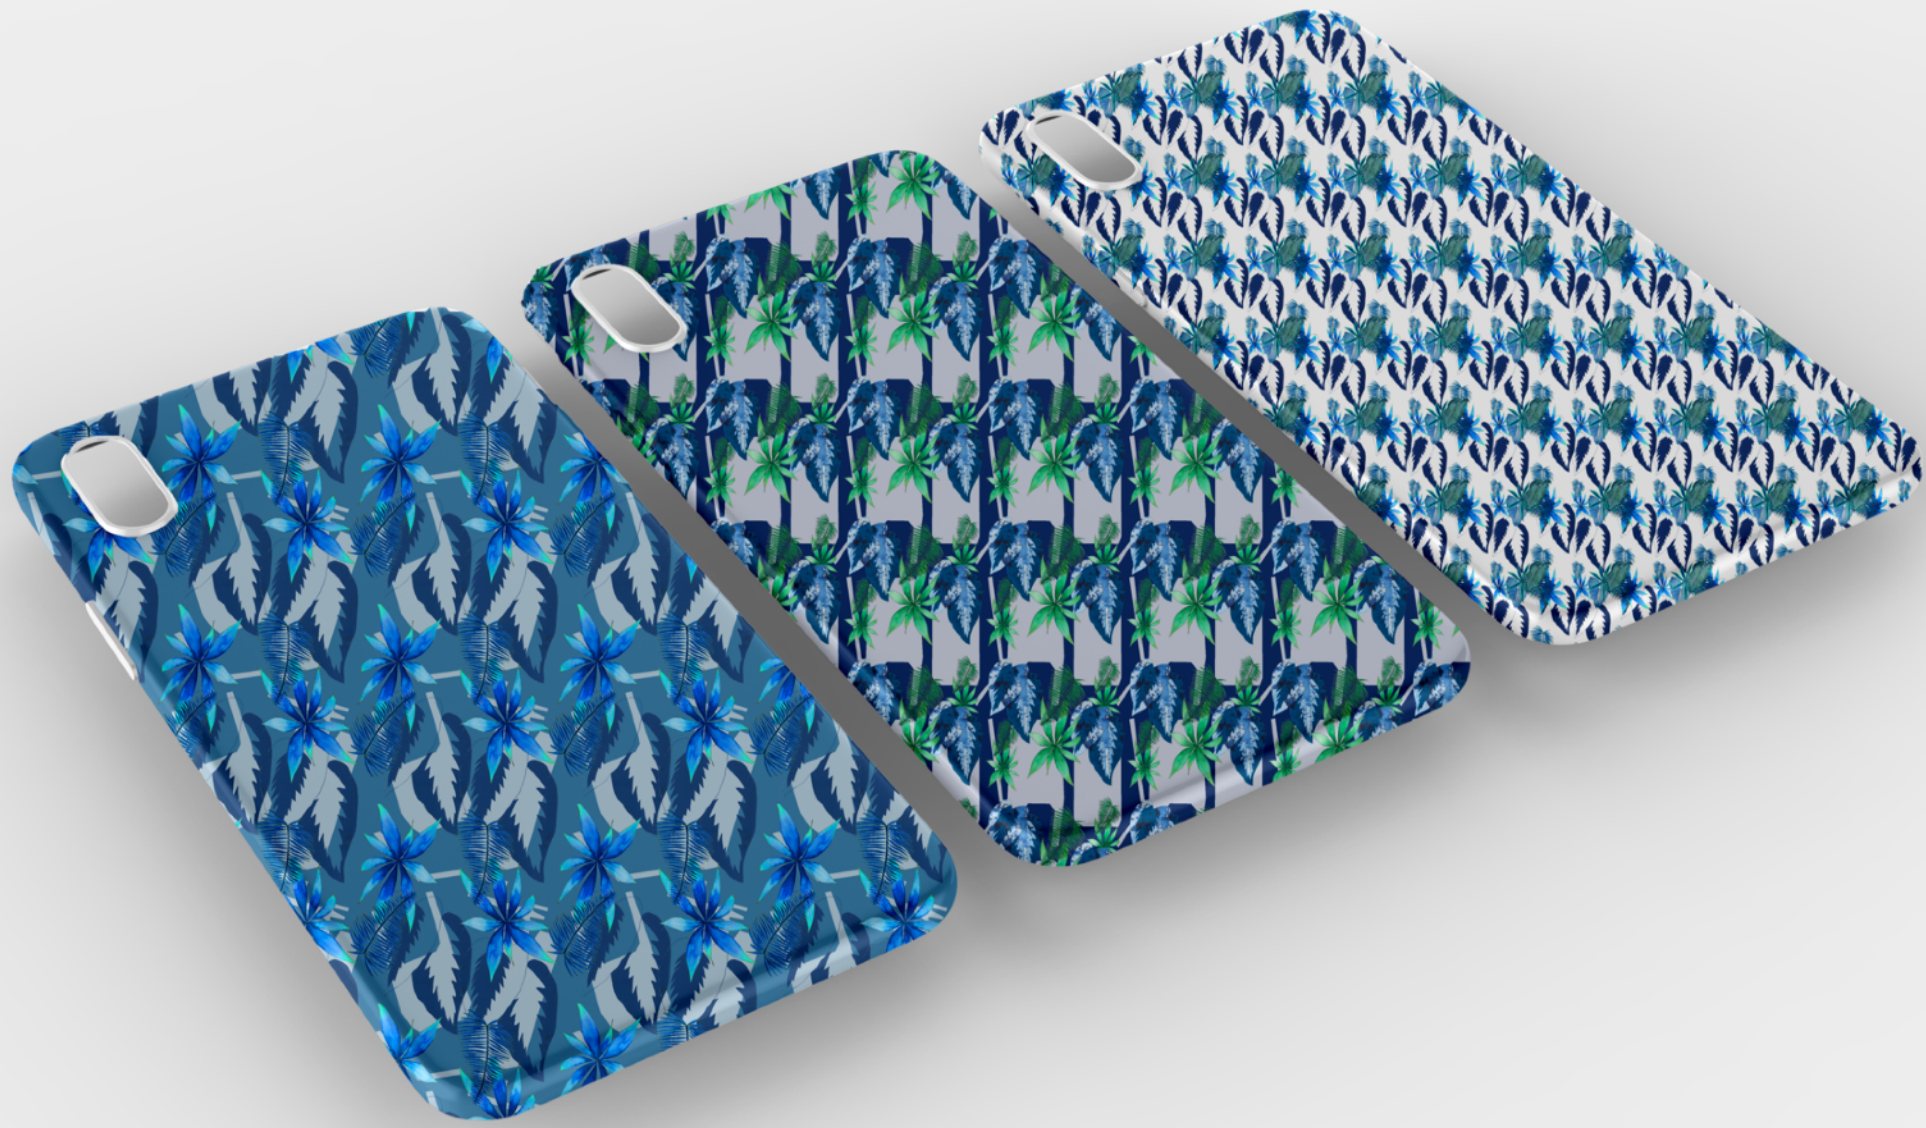

I used images from moodle, as well as some that I took around my home to edit my designs into. This will allow my design to be imagined into a real life setting.

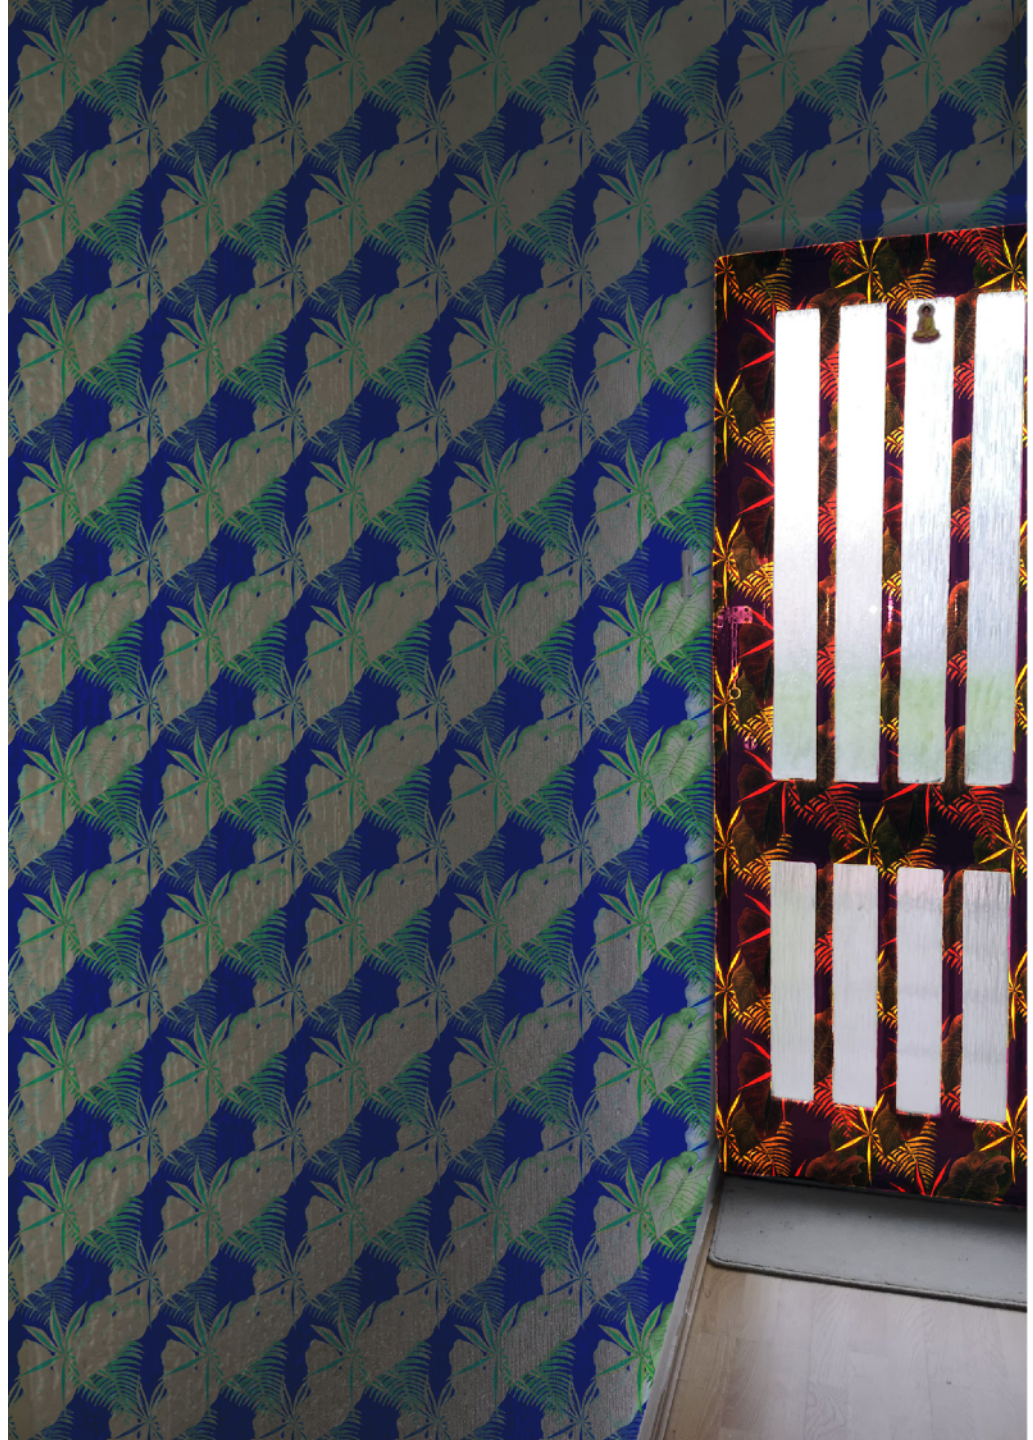

Practice embroidery

French Knot
Back stitch
Bullion knots
Chain stitch
Split stitch

Hand embroidery

I used the same imagery from my drawn design for this embroidery piece. As I had no embroidery string I used regular cotton or polyester thread by doubling it up twice.
I tried to use a few different embroidery stitches to create more visual different.
