

Thought for the week

(contributed by Jennifer Doubleday, Head of Personal Development)
Here's a clever thought for the age of the internet:
"Home is where you hang your @."

Thought for the week

(contributed by Jennifer Doubleday, Head of Personal Development)
Here's a clever little reminder of the way those social networking sites can help to bring us all closer together:
"Great groups from little icons grow."

... As one of the UK's most high-profile academics, Mary Beard is used to taking a bit of flak for speaking her mind. But the professor of Classics at the University of Cambridge said she had been shocked by some of the venomous internet trolling she has suffered after suggesting on BBC One's Question Time that immigration had brought some benefits to Lincolnshire. The "gobsmacking" misogyny of many hateful postings on one site, easily accessible via Google, took "more than a few steps into sadism" and would be "quite enough to put many women off appearing in public [and] contributing to political debate", she said on her A Don's Life blog on 20 January.

I HOPE I FINISH THE EXAM BEFORE THEY CHANGE THE SYSTEM AGAIN!

Times Higher
Jan & Feb
2013