Recently, I have joined the university of Wales trinity saint David's where I have taken the employability skills course. As a person who has already worked for several companies and have managed to run a company of my own, I was very curious about this course, and I thought that there is not much to learn about knowledge related to work skills and employability. On the other hand, I have realized that there is much more to learn and gain from this course because we have the chance to ask questions, work on our personal growth and career development. In this course it is important for me to develop myself in different perspectives, I am keen to learn and develop myself during this course. As I have mentioned I have a lot of work experience, but my goal is to aim for different work placements and opportunities. According to Cotrell. For me as an introvert dealing with new people and opening myself was stressful and anxious, but at the same time I thought that it was a wonderful experience for myself to improve my public speaking. As time went on, I started feeling that this was the right choice for me from all prospects because as a class of 30 students, we are all different, but we are there for each other as well as the teachers who are giving us enough motivation and inspiration to carry on. In my opinion to handle all the assignments, apps and work in class is sometimes just too much work but at the end of the day it is a university course so it will be challenging work. From my side my overall Fellings about it all are somewhere in the middle, now I am not able to say how I feel about this course as it has
