ONE LIFE SPAN
PSYCHOLOGICAL THEORY 36

Age 3 Freud Between the ages of three and six, preschool-aged children are able to take the initiative and exert influence over their environment through play and social interactions. The child eventually starts to identify with the same-sex parent as a way to own the other parent vicariously. Yet, Freud thought that	Age Range for the Phallic Stage: 3 to 6 years Sexual Zone: Genitals According to Freud, the libido's major emphasis is on the genitalia during the phallic stage. Children start to learn about the differences between males and girls at this age.	Age 6 years Freud thought that boys start to see their fathers as competitors for their mother's love. These desires to possess the mother and take her place or the father are characterised by the Oedipus complex. The youngster also worries that the father will punish him for these emotions, which Freud called "castration anxiety."	Girls: Initiative: Creating a Feeling of Purpose Incubation Period: 6 years old till puberty Inactive Sexual Emotions in the Erogenous Zone At this phase, the energies do not get restrained while the superego continues to grow. Children form relationships, social skills, and morals with peers and other adults outside the family.	Pre-schoolers, according to Erikson, must choose between showing initiative and feeling sorry. By acquiring the skills of setting and achieving goals while interacting with others, pre-schoolers can make this task. Those who are successful will develop their confidence and sense of purpose.
