

The Learner, School and Community all depend on each other to enable effective teaching and learning. Bronfenbrenner (1979) believes that interactions between the learner and their environment influences their development. Bronfenbrenner (1979) split the environment into five levels. The microsystem is the child's immediate environment for example, parents and home life. The mesosystem is the link made between home, school and the community. The exosystem is the link with the indirect environment such as the neighbourhood they live in. The macrosystem is related to the child's social and cultural values and the chronosystem relates to the changes that occur throughout the child's life such as moving home (Learning Theories, 2017). My placement has strong links between the school, home and the community which provides continuous support for the learners.
