It's 10:05 on Saturday, you are the new Head of HR and it is only your third week on the job.

The Senior Management Team (SMT) is not in today, but general staff are. The CEO emailed you late last night and told you to prepare for a meeting with the SMT on Monday at 4pm. The subject of the meeting is HR Strategy (which has been non-existent prior to your appointment) and you have been asked to deliver your plan for the next 12-36 months, using no more than two sides of A4 paper. Something just did not "feel" right about this request and you decided to come into work today to get a better sense of what is going on and write your plan while it is quiet - over to you!

Don't scroll through this pdf, wander through the different rooms by clicking arrows. When in a room, click around each location to find hidden clues that might help you to prepare your plan (there are 31 objects to interact with and you will need internet access)

Monday 16:00 - HR <YAWN!>

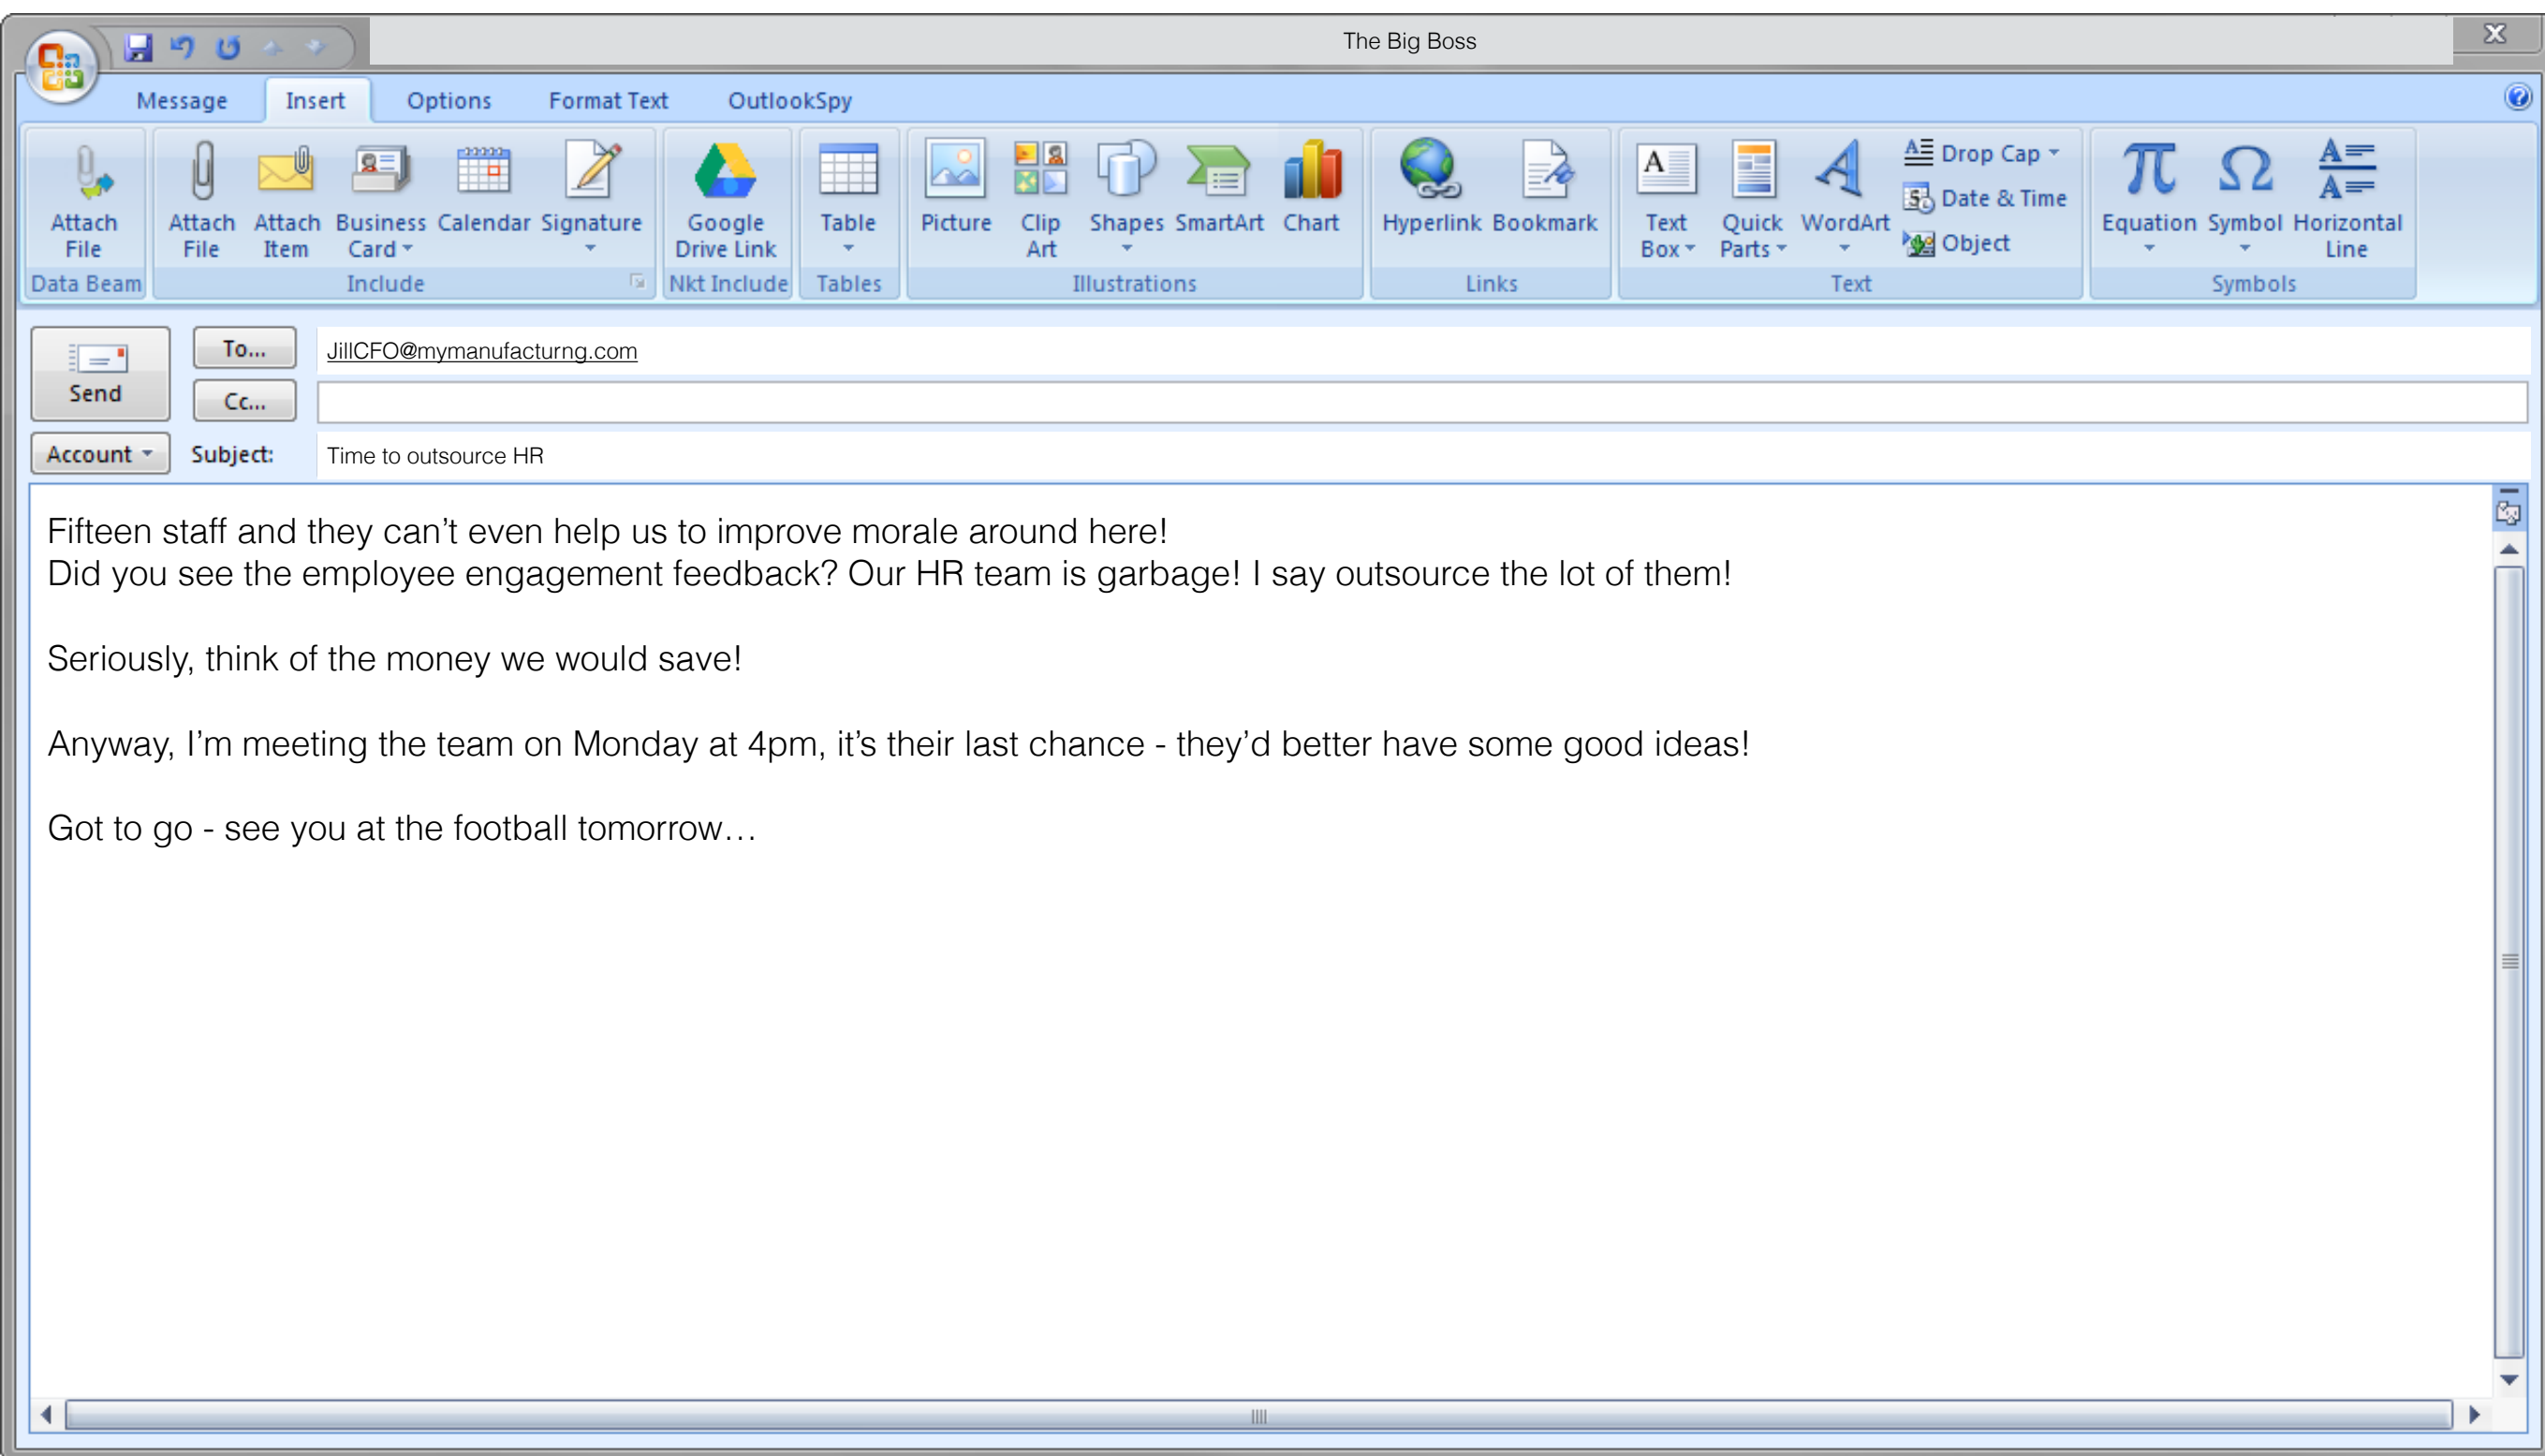

Agree with Jill!!!!

The future of HR is NO HR!!!
Our HR needs to watch that video!

I think the Q2 drop in productivity was all down to a lack of motivation...
where's HR's help with any of this???

Note to self:
Look for a job!

I've updated my LinkedIn profile last night. I heard from a recruiter that the labour market doesn't look too good at the moment. I might have to tough it out for a while, but, yeah, I'm looking for jobs.

The deal is done! We are definitely going to open a new plant in France! Not sure we've given adequate consideration to the resourcing side of this. Given the events in Paris not so long ago, will our managers be willing to move...even temporarily?

Need to talk to Bob, he's the ops man!
In the mean time, don't tell ANYONE and don't leave any paperwork relating to this around the office!
