SECTION A1

Consider carefully that ^{they} are being deceitful about these matters: you will realize this in due course.

For gentlemen, exactly as I said before, I have a friend Sotnatos (literally: there is a friend to me being Sotnatos), and setting off homeward, I met him exiting the field at about dusk and had dinner with him, and when he (had dined well) was sufficiently sated, setting off, he departed. And yet gentlemen, give further thought to this first: that if I was conspiring against Eratosthenes on that night, whether it was better for me to dine elsewhere or to invite (the person who would dine with me) my future dining companion to me?

For that man had already ~~done~~ to come into the house. Moreover, do you think it seemed (reasonable) ideal ^{he} that I should depart and leave me alone and ^{that I should be} isolated, or that I request like my dining companion (with that man) to remain so that he could accept the adulterer with me? Furthermore gentlemen, do you not think that it seemed good to me to send word to friends on that day and to request them to meet at the house of the friend living closest nearby, rather than me running around at night as soon as I realised what was going on; not knowing who I would find at home and who I would find out? I came to my Amosins' house and that of this one and that one but they were not at home (because I had no idea), and I found that others were also not indoors; but taking those that were there, I set-off. And yet, if I had foreknowledge, do you not think it would have seemed good to me to reach attendants and to send word to friends so that I could myself could enter as safely as possible.

to remain so that he could accuse the adulterer with me? Furthermore gentlemen, do you not think that it seemed good to me to send word to friends on that day and to request them to meet at the house of the friend living closest nearby, rather than me running around at night as soon as I realised what was going on; not knowing who I would find at home and who I would find out? I came to my Amosiah's house and that of this one and that one but they were not at home (because I had no idea), and I found that others were also not indoors; but taking those that were there, I set-off. And yet, if I had foreknowledge, do you not think it would have seemed good to me to reach attendants and to send word to friends so that I ~~would~~ myself could enter as safely as possible

(for how could I ~~know~~ have known if that man was carrying some iron weapon?) and enact my retribution with as many witnesses as possible?

But as things stood, and not knowing how things would transpire on that night, I gathered those that ~~were~~^{were} there. Please can the witnesses of these events step forward on my behalf.

SECTION B

Council, at first, I thought to get away from the desiring ~~substance~~ (like desiring from people) of living a quiet life and not having lawsuits nor trials.

Yet as things apparently stand, having fallen unexpectedly fallen victim to blame and by surprise to false answers, as a result if ~~many~~ so that as a result if how ~~is~~ [the 'O' or - the ~~set~~ accusative relative pronoun] it seemed to me necessary that those events that have not already transpired be given and that they go in concerning _____^{for}; because of this, the common dangers became so numerous and they heard no one and surely wronged them.
