Criminal Justice Act (2003)

- Schedule 21 to the Criminal Justice Act 2003, which provides guidance on determining the minimum term under a life sentence for murder.
- The starting point for life sentences is 30 years for murders motivated by hostility on the grounds of race, religion, sexual orientation, disability or transgender
- Section 146 of the 2003 Act, which provides for sentences to be made more severe for any offence where the offender was motivated by hostility towards the victim on the grounds of disability or sexual orientation.
- Section 145 makes similar provision in relation to offences aggravated by race and religion.

Hatred and the link to Extremism

- Hate Crime and Hate Incidents offer the opportunity to identify individuals at an early stage whose actions and behaviours indicate potential for Counter Terrorism or Domestic Extremism related activity.
- Identification of these individuals supports the PREVENT programme which aims to stop people becoming or supporting terrorist and to do this by challenging ideologies, protecting vulnerable individuals and providing support. In order to assist with this all police officers are to consider the following points when dealing with Hate Crimes and Incidents.

- H – History
- A - Attitude
- T – Target
- E - Extreme

- C – Cohesion
- R – Radicalisation
- I – Intelligence
- M – Motivation
- E - Engagement
