WEBSITE

Database structure and design - database design is quite basic with two stand-alone tables. You are not showing normalisation here. The status field would be a good candidate for normalisation to another table as there are lots of repeating values. Additionally, it limits your ability to show joins in your PHP code. 5.5/10

Range of PHP code demonstrated - Search is good and you can search multiple fields. Search is case sensitive unfortunately so I cannot search for Citroen and citroen and get the same results. Might be an idea to allow a search by date also, so you can search for cars that need to be cleaned urgently, for example. Add car works well with suitable validation. Edit and Delete also work well. It's a bit strange that you have a mixture of procedural PHP and object-oriented PHP - best to pick one and stick to it! Overall a good range of PHP code demonstrated 32/40

Overall integration of website - It's a bit strange to be forced to log in as soon as you arrive on the website. You should have a "public" area to allow the user to see what your website has got to offer. Many won't register blind. Otherwise nicely laid out and quite easy to navigate 11/15

REPORT

You have not read the assignment brief on what was required for the report. I asked for an analysis of security in your website and what you had implemented so far and what you would do in the future. You should look at issues such as SQL Injection, Spambots, SSL which were covered in class and others too. It is a shame you missed this as the implementation was quite strong.

Overall 48.5%
