Changes to Fandom Metatag Wrangling Guidelines

Published: Thu 29 Jan 2026 06:22AM UTC Comments: 21

Over the last year, Tag Wranglers have been actively discussing how to make fandom metatags more useful to users, both to find the content they're looking for and filter out the content they aren't. Since our last update, these discussions have now concluded, and we want to provide an update about how our guidelines have changed.

Social Media Research

For social media research I'm going to look at a few different artists and see what other social media platforms they use!

For myself, so far I only have an instagram account!

Outcome

Out of all the social media's I looked through on other artists websites, it seems the top one is Instagram followed by TikTok and Tumblr!

As said previously I already have an Instagram account, I'm not so sure if I'd set up a TikTok but I'd definitely want to get a Tumblr account!

Welcome to my portfolio! Here you will find all sorts of illustrations and university work!

About Star Cat Illustration

Bleep bloop! Hello there you must be the new recruits! My name is Glorp and I'm here to tell you all about our amazing Captain Star!

Shhhh don't tell her I said this but she actually has a human disguise! To you humans her name is Imogen and she's an Illustration student from Wales! (Cool right!?). That basically means she gets to draw cute characters for a living and sometimes even get payed to do it! This website was created for one of her University classes to show off all her cool human art to other cool humans all over the world!

When she's not working, she spends her time hanging out with her friends, playing video games and napping! (Still a cat at heart!).

I hope all of this information has been helpful to you, now go out and enjoy the rest of her super cool website! And please don't tell her I said any of this...

Zander Letter.

I've managed to get through university and am now having the time of my life selling stuff all over the UK and online! I did struggle a bit with the last year, but it was so much fun focusing on bugs and beetles; I loved it so much I've started using them more in my art, and they have become very popular on my Etsy shop. I wrote how infographics need to be more interesting visually and how important they are for kids, which helped me create a whole set of printed bug prints that I used to spread awareness to help people grow out of the stigma that they are scary. When it came to the exhibition, I had such an incredible time making a stand for my bug pamphlets, and reached out to the bug farm in St Davids to possibly collaborate, and they are looking into something similar to my prints as I type this!

After University was done I set up an online shop on etsy to sell as much bug branded stuff as I could, including little figures, prints, stamps, you name it, I had it. They were all really popular especially since my online presence blew up. I started going to conventions and stalls all over the country, and everyone loves my little bugs. Everything I don't sell I keep in storage, and my partner helps me keep books. Although I am more well known now, I do hand out lots of branded items and always put a business card in my Etsy orders. I try aim for around 6-10 conventions a year, which is very busy but it keeps me on my toes. Ever since my mental health got a lot better during the first semester of the last year, I've been really enjoying keeping busy with all the preparations for these big events. I've been thinking of opening a physical art shop somewhere with some other artists, but that can wait.

Other than my convention tables and Etsy page, I've taken up doing some small commission work. This is usually bug related, but I do do some character work as well, such as furies and so forth. I'm quite popular with cat lovers as well, as I can't resist taking commissions of a little guy or gal. This has given me a pretty substantial portfolio, which I still upload to the website that I made on Wix all that time ago, although I did have to update it along the road. I also started posting all this work on my social media platforms, other than just the bugs, which is going just as well. I'm going to be getting a stall at a convention names "Scotia Con" next year, and I can't wait for all the attention from the little insects I've got.

With all the work I have, I do occasionally take shifts up at a wonderful little coffee shop a friend owns, as its very art themed and has a very strong stance on creatives. With everything going on, and all the art I still get to do, I could not be happier with how life went after graduation. Also, I am so thankful to my partner for keeping me going during that last year of university, and for helping me with me career now. I can't lie I do help them as well with their work, but they really do still keep my head above the water. I love what I do, and am so thankful I get to do it with about the things and with the people I really love.
