

You've got it covered!

There are many design and illustration magazines currently on the market. They offer an insight into the current trends and the who's who of the design industry. These can be a valuable tool to the up and coming student illustrator as well as the practicing professionals.

You should make it part of your routine as an illustration student, to explore these periodicals regularly, when researching a brief or just to expand your understanding of the industry (or even to be inspired by the pretty pictures).

Task

Your task is to create art work for the cover of an art magazine of your choice.

What to do:

Explore and find out what magazines are available (The majority of available magazines have online versions).

Choose an article from any one of your researched magazines that particularly interests you.

Use this article as the basis for the illustration to be used as a full colour cover.

Be aware of the space needed around the illustration for the magazine title and other text (text should not be applied to the finished illustration).

If you are able to (and have access to Photoshop or InDesign) add any supporting text on a scanned copy of your artwork.

OR

Alternatively, sketch out a rough copy of your art work and add the text to this.

By the next session you will have two pieces of work. One piece of finished art work and one copy with added text.
