

NICK PAVONE

Multitalented audiophile Nick Pavone has risen up the ranks to discover his place in music production for the alternative artist. Having gone from roadie and grip to engineer and mixer, he knows what style sounds like. His underground experience of writing with bands and learning under top technicians meant he was never far from a sound system.

With years of work in the music industry his roles included session writer and guitarist, live technician, and music production support. His sound engineering work has taken him to many mainstream UK venues and the Royal Army Barracks London. After writing and touring his 2012 concept demo album he paused his music writing and leant towards the film and media industries where he developed as a sound recordist, audio designer and film music producer. He operated under the name of KtD Audio and worked for names such as O2, Samsung and Jeep, his work history took him to St. James Palace, GSK and Google London HQ.

He continues to extend the reach of his skills with TV, film and music video appearances. With an affinity for synthesised and orchestral music his cinematically contemporary palate delivers a truly alternative blend of original music.
