

THE NEW TESTAMENT LIBRARY

Editorial Advisory Board

C. CLIFTON BLACK
M. EUGENE BORING
JOHN T. CARROLL

Marianne Meye Thompson

John

A Commentary

WJK WESTMINSTER
JOHN KNOX PRESS
LOUISVILLE • KENTUCKY

*To my students, who have responded faithfully
to Jesus' call to follow him:
friends in shared work and witness*

© 2015 Marianne Meye Thompson

First edition

Published by Westminster John Knox Press
Louisville, Kentucky

15 16 17 18 19 20 21 22 23 24—10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be reproduced or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic or mechanical, including photocopying, recording, or by any information storage or retrieval system, without permission in writing from the publisher. For information, address Westminster John Knox Press, 100 Witherspoon Street, Louisville, Kentucky 40202-1396. Or contact us online at www.wjkbooks.com.

Scripture quotations outside of the Gospel of John, unless otherwise indicated, are from the New Revised Standard Version of the Bible, copyright © 1989 by the Division of Christian Education of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A., and are used by permission. Translations of the Gospel of John are by the author.

Book design by Jennifer K. Cox

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Thompson, Marianne Meye.
John : a commentary / Marianne Meye Thompson.—First edition.
pages cm.—(The New Testament Library)
Includes bibliographical references and index.
ISBN 978-0-664-22111-9 (alk. paper)
1. Bible, John—Commentaries. I. Title.
BS2615.S3.T56 2015
226.5'077—dc23

2015002763

© The paper used in this publication meets the minimum requirements of the American National Standard for Information Sciences—Permanence of Paper for Printed Library Materials, ANSI Z39.48-1992.

Most Westminster John Knox Press books are available at special quantity discounts when purchased in bulk by corporations, organizations, and special-interest groups. For more information, please e-mail SpecialSales@wjkbooks.com.

- With a prepositional phrase, one believes “in him” (eis auton, in the accusative case, 2:11; 3:16; en autō, with the dative case, 3:15).⁵⁷
- “That” (hoti) specifies the content of what is believed (8:24; 11:27; 42; 13:19; 14:10; 16:30; 17:21; 20:31).

Those who believe are by definition Jesus’ disciples (see 6:64–66). Not only are disciples invited to initial belief; they are also exhorted to continue in faith as well (14:1). Believing (pisteuein without an object) essentially means commitment or trust.

There is also a strong confessional aspect to such commitment in John. Trusting Jesus, or believing in him or in his name, includes coming to own the confessions articulated by various figures in the Gospel, from the Baptist’s initial witness (1:29; 30, 34, 36) to Thomas’s climactic confession (20:28). One both believes in Jesus and believes certain things to be true about him. Often such statements are framed with the verb “believe” followed by “that” (hoti) and the content of belief or confession (“I believe that you are the Messiah,” 11:27; “Do you not believe that I am in the Father?” 14:10). Virtually all such statements focus on Jesus’ relationship to God (8:24; 11:27; 42; 13:19; 14:10; 16:30; 17:21; 20:31). Disciples follow after Jesus, and in doing so they come to understand who he is.⁵⁸ In this sense pisteuō (“believe”) is at times indistinguishable from ginōskō or oida (“know”; e.g., 6:69). These two words for “knowing” and “understanding” are often interchangeable (7:27; 8:55; 13:7). The world does not know—accept, recognize, respond to—Jesus (1:26; 31, 33, 48; 8:55; 10:14–15, 27), but the disciples “know that” (ginōskein + hoti) Jesus is the Holy One of God (6:69), among other confessions about him. By following Jesus they come to “know the truth” (ginōskein ten alētheian). “Knowing” is not merely knowing things about Jesus; it is also understanding who he is (see esp. 10:38, where “know and understand” translates gnōte kai ginōskēte; cf. 12:16).

John’s vocabulary of faith—following, believing, knowing, and seeing—is used to refer both to the initial response and to ongoing commitment to Jesus. John’s characteristic word “abide” (menein) denotes the persistence or faithfulness that must characterize disciples (15:4–10). Those disciples who have believed in Jesus will know the truth if they continue or abide in him (8:30–31). Knowing and understanding Jesus cannot be separated from the actual practice of discipleship: from following him, seeing what he does, and in being with him, coming to understand who he is.

Those who follow Jesus are exhorted to keep his commandments (14:15, 21, 23), above all the command to love him (14:15, 21, 23, 24; 21:15, 16, 17) and each other (13:34–35). John’s metaphors further underscore the corporate dimensions of discipleship: Jesus gathers his sheep (10:16), the scattered children of God (11:52). On the cross, Jesus designates his mother and the disciple whom he loved as mother and son to each other, thereby establishing the family of God’s children (19:26–27). When the man born blind is virtually disowned by his parents (9:21–23) and ridiculed and repudiated by others, Jesus seeks him out (9:28–35). Throughout the Gospel Jesus has spoken of his death as the act whereby “all people” are drawn to him (12:32); the new family gathered by him is the result of his death.

In the Synoptic Gospels, Jesus admonishes his disciples to love their enemies; in John, the primary command given to them is to love each other (13:34–35). Both the Synoptic and Johannine traditions base these commands on the model of divine love (Matt 5:43–45; John 3:16). Even as the Father demonstrates his love for the world through the giving of the Son, so Jesus’ followers bear witness to God’s love as they together embody the kind of self-giving love for each other that Jesus has for them.

Thus, following Jesus includes:

- initial and ongoing commitment, being in his presence, coming to a certain understanding about him (that he is the Messiah, comes from God, and is spoken of in Scripture)
- faithful, persistent following after him (abiding in him; following him)
- keeping his commandments
- loving Jesus and loving one another

For one to become a disciple of Jesus, God must be active, “giving” and “drawing” people to Jesus (6:37, 44–45, 65; 10:27–29); God’s spirit “blows where it wants” to quicken life and faith (3:8; 6:63). God bears witness to Jesus (5:37; 8:18); God’s Spirit descends upon Jesus, identifying him as the one who baptizes with the Spirit, the Son of God (1:31–34). Jesus chooses his disciples (6:70; 13:18; 15:16). John not only emphasizes but also accords primacy to the initiative and action of God in bringing people to faith and sustaining them in it: God loves the world (3:16), seeks true worshipers (4:23), holds his flock (10:28–29), and tends the vine (15:1–8). Without the love, initiative, and continued sustaining action of God, there would be no life.

John also reckons with the instrumentality or agency of others: people bring disciples, friends, or neighbors to Jesus (1:35–37, 41, 45; 4:29; 12:21–22); similarly, the mutual love of Jesus’ disciples for one another bears witness to Jesus (13:35). The Scriptures point to Jesus (2:22; 5:39; 20:9), as do his signs (20:30–31), calling for the human response of faith. Although John frequently uses the word “believe,” the Gospel explicitly denies that the disciples “choose” or “decide” (eklegomai or hōireomai) to be Jesus’ disciples or to believe (6:70; 13:18; 15:16). There is genuine human response, but not without the enlivening work of God’s Spirit. As God draws people to Jesus, so God’s Spirit continues to teach them, through the Scriptures and in the context of the community, how to understand the person and ministry of Jesus (2:22; 13:7; 14:26; 15:26).

14:1–11 Jesus’ Imminent Departure to the Father

Jesus’ departure is now imminent. He promises his disciples that, if he departs, he will “come again and take you to myself, so that where I am you may be also” (14:3). This is a reference to Jesus’ future return in order to gather the faithful to be with him in his dwelling with God. Later Jesus will speak of other ways in which the disciples will know and experience his presence. Now he

57. See Matt 18:6 (eis eme); 27:42 (ep’ auton).

58. See Mark 8:27–31 par.; note the plethora of designations for Jesus in the Synoptics: son of Abraham, son of David, Son of God, Son of Man, Messiah, King of the Jews, King of Israel, prophet, Lord.

assures them that, because he is returning to the Father, he will subsequently take his disciples there as well. Since he has mediated the presence of the Father to them in his earthly life, they can be confident that he will take them to be in the presence of the Father.

14:1 "Let not your hearts^a be troubled. Believe in God and believe in me.^b

2 In my Father's house there are many rooms.^c If it were not so, would I have told you that I am going to prepare a place for you? 3 And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and take you to myself, so that where I am you may be also. 4 And you know the way to where I am going."

5 Thomas said to him, "Lord, we do not know where you are going; how can we know the way?"

6 Jesus said to him, "I am the way and the truth and the life. No one comes to the Father except through me. 7 If you had known me, you would know my Father as well. From now on you will know him and have seen him."^d

8 Philip said to him, "Lord, show us the Father, and it will be enough for us."

9 Jesus said to him, "I have been with you such a long time, and still you do not know me, Philip? The one who has seen me has seen the Father. How can you say, 'Show us the Father'? 10 Do you not believe that I am in the Father and the Father is in me? The words that I speak to you, I do not speak on my own, but the Father who abides in me does his works. 11 Believe me that I am in the Father and the Father is in me. Otherwise, believe on account of the works themselves."

a. While "hearts" is singular in the Greek (kardia), with the plural pronoun (hymōn) it is best translated in the plural.

b. Pisteueite can be parsed as imperative or indicative. Since the commands to believe (1) follow the imperative "Let not your hearts be troubled" and (2) are joined by kai, the most likely translation takes both instances of pisteueite ("believe") as imperatives.

c. BDAG: "a place in which one stays, dwelling (-place), room, abode." At the time of the KJV (1611), "mansions" carried that connotation in English, though it no longer does so.

d. The tenses of the verbs pose a challenge to translation: "If you had known (RSV; ESV) me [egnōkate, perfect tense], you will know [gnōsethe, future] my Father as well. From now on you do know him [ginōskete, present] and have seen him [heōrakate, perfect]." One would not expect a perfect ("had known me") in the protasis to be followed by a future ("you will know the Father") or a present ("do know him") in the apodosis. Hence, the tenses here are not translated woodenly. John means to say that knowing (recognizing, understanding) Jesus leads to knowing the Father.

[14:1] After telling the disciples that his departure from them is imminent (13:33), that one of his disciples will betray him (13:21) and another will deny him (13:38), Jesus admonishes them to lose neither courage nor faith even though circumstances that are about to unfold will threaten their trust in him.⁵⁹ To be sure, the prospect of death troubles (tarrasseō) even Jesus (11:33; 12:27; 13:21); little wonder that it would also trouble the disciples. The command "Let not your hearts be troubled" (cf. 14:27) anticipates the disorientation brought on by the grief and shock caused by Jesus' crucifixion (see 20:1, 9, 11-13, 19). Jesus encourages them, exhorting them to continue believing in God and in him. Faith or trust in God and in Jesus are paired; to believe in one is to believe in the other, because Jesus is the one who has been sent by the Father, to make the Father known, and to lead people to the Father (cf. 5:23-24; 12:45; 14:10). Jesus implicitly cautions the disciples neither to fall away, as other disciples did (6:60, 66; 8:30-31), nor to betray him, as Judas did.

[2-5] Jesus' next words are clearly intended to provide reassurance and hope to the disciples in the face of his death, even if it is not entirely clear what he is promising. Referring to the "many rooms" (monai) in "my Father's house" or "household" (hē oikia tou patros; cf. 4:53; 8:35), Jesus informs the disciples that he is going to "prepare a place" for them, and that he will "come again" and take them to himself, so that they may be where he is. Although the New Testament regularly speaks of Jesus' parousia ("presence" or "coming"),⁶⁰ this is the lone instance where Jesus explicitly speaks of coming again.⁶¹ Jesus promises to return and to take his disciples to "my Father's house" (or "household"), likely an allusion to the heavenly dwellings prepared for the righteous, so that they may be with him.⁶² In John, when Jesus comes "again," he will complete his work as the good shepherd, gathering all his own together. In the Father's household there is room for all those whom Jesus will bring to be with him (10:16; 12:32).⁶³

Because the Farewell Discourse persistently stresses that Jesus will "come" and be with the disciples (14:18, 23; 17:23, 26), some interpreters understand

59. See Parzenios (2005) for the consolatory elements of this discourse as reflecting Greco-Roman consolation literature (esp. 22-31, 90-109).

60. The word is not used in John; cf. 1 Cor 15:23; 1 Thess 2:19; 4:15; 5:23; 2 Thess 2:1, 8, 15; 2 Pet 1:16; 3:4; 1 John 2:28; using erchomai in 1 Cor 11:26; 2 Thess 1:10, as in John 14:3.

61. The NT does not refer to Jesus' coming or "coming again" as the "second coming."

62. Jesus comes "from heaven" (3:13, 31; 6:41-42, 50-51, 58), but neither he nor believers are said to go there; Jesus returns to his Father; believers hope to be with Jesus in the presence of his Father. For heavenly dwellings, see 1 En. 39.4-8; 2 En. 61.2-3; 4 Ezra 7.80, 85, 101; cf. Luke 16:9. Steven Bryan offers the intriguing suggestion that "my Father's house" refers to a heavenly temple that Jesus prepares to serve as the eternal dwelling place of the righteous with God. Philo (Somm. 1.256) speaks of the soul's return to "the paternal house" (eis ton patēron oikon epanelthein; see also 1.135); Heraclitus, Ep. 5, to Amphidamas (in Cynic Epistles 194-95), refers to the immortal soul's dwelling in "etheral dwellings" (aitherioi domoi).

63. Among the scholars who interpret Jesus' words as a reference to his (eschatological) coming are Barrett 457; Beasley-Murray 249-50; Frey 2000, 143-50; Lincoln 2005, 389-90; Schelle 1998, 227-28; Talbert 204.

Jesus' promise to "come again" somewhat differently: for example, as the coming of Jesus to believers upon their death⁶⁴ or as Jesus' ongoing presence made possible by the impartation of the Spirit.⁶⁵ To be sure, Jesus' parting words are shot through with the promise of his presence; but here he explicitly promises that his future return will complete his work of gathering "the scattered children of God" (cf. 11:52) to their dwelling place with him and with the Father (14:3). In light of the fact that he later promises his disciples that he and his Father will "make our home" (monēn par autō poiēsomenha, 14:23) with those who keep Jesus' commands, it may well be that even the promise here—that Jesus will take them to be with him—already entails his joining them to himself as the risen Lord.⁶⁶ While Jesus promises he will come again, in the meantime he will also be present with the disciples in other ways: they are never without his presence.

If Jesus has explained any of this to his disciples, if he has shared with them his knowledge that "his hour has come" to go to the Father (13:1), they seem not to have understood it; although Jesus asserts that they know the way to the place where he is going (14:4), Thomas responds with bewilderment that they do not even know where Jesus is going. How then can they know the way to it (v. 5)? Jesus' reply (v. 6) seems to answer a different question than the one Thomas implicitly asks.⁶⁷ The answer to Thomas's immediate question is that Jesus is going to the Father; he goes by means of his own death and resurrection. Jesus answers the question how others come to the Father: they come to the Father through him. Implicitly, then, Jesus interprets his death and resurrection, the means by which he returns to the Father, as the path by which others come to the Father.

[6-11] In one of the Gospel's distinctive "I am" statements, Jesus identifies himself as "the way and the truth and the life." The three predicative nominatives (way, truth, life), linked by the simple conjunction "and" (kai), could be understood to indicate three distinct but related predications regarding Jesus. But the following explanatory comment ("No one comes to the Father but by

64. Bullmann 1971, 602.

65. R. Brown 1970, 624-27. Keener (2:938-39) contends that the only possible way to read the text is as an example of present rather than future eschatology (14:23). O'Day (741) argues that the "heavenly dwellings" (as virtually all instances of "place" in John) symbolically depict relationship, here referring to the full communion with God made possible by Jesus' death and resurrection. In light of the equation of Jesus' body with the temple in 2:19-21, Kerr (298) argues that "my Father's house" (14:2) refers to Jesus' body and, by extension, to the community of believers; see also Coloe 2007, 108-12, 145-48; Grayson 115; McCaffrey 138-40.

66. Some interpreters believe that Jesus' promise to "come again" refers to all forms of the coming of Christ (Hoskyns 454; Barrett 457; Ridderbos 489-92).

67. A textual variant (see NRSV 14:4 mg.) arose to smooth the transition to Thomas's dual query about where Jesus is going and how he will go: "You know where I am going, and you know the way" (hopou egō hypogō oidate kai iēn hodon oidate; Metzger 207).

me") suggests that the three predicates could better be understood to indicate that Jesus is the way that leads to the Father, precisely because he himself embodies the truth and life that come from the Father (cf. 1:4-5, 17; 5:33; 11:25; 17:3). Thus we might translate, "I am the way that leads to truth and life." In the Psalms the "way" of God is spoken of frequently (see Pss 1:6; 5:8; 18:30; 25:8-12; 27:11), where the word in the LXX is hodos ("way," "path"), as here. The psalmist professes to "hate every false way" because God's word (ho logos) is "a lamp to my feet and a light to my path" (119:104-5 [118:104-5 LXX]). In John, Jesus is the Word, the light that illumines the true way to God and so gives life.

The assertion that Jesus is "the way to the Father" (14:6) is the result of, and gives expression to, Johannine Christology.⁶⁸ Because Jesus is the Word, and because he embodies truth, light, and life from the Father, he is also the way to the Father. Jesus is not extrinsic to the identity of God; he is not one of many prophets or agents who speak what is true. He is God's own Word, embodied. Because Jesus' identity is intrinsic to the identity of God, because God has made Jesus equal to him and one with him, because God has chosen to be made one with Jesus, Jesus is the way to the Father. To know Jesus is to know the Father who sent him; to know the only Son is to know the only God. Jesus' identity as the unique Son of the Father grounds the sweeping declaration that "no one comes to the Father except through me."

Jesus' remark that "from now on" (ap' arti, v. 7) the disciples will know and see the Father implies that something will soon change, or has changed, so that "from now on" something is possible that has not been possible before. But the statement is puzzling, because when Philip entreats Jesus, "Show us the Father" (v. 8), Jesus replies that if they have seen him, they have seen the Father. In other words, the disciples should already have "known" and "seen" the Father in Jesus. What, then, will change "from now on"? It may be that the temporal indicator "from now on" signals the imminent actualization of the conditions necessary for understanding Jesus more fully, conditions that include the resurrection of Jesus and the giving of the Spirit. These new realities alter the epistemological stance of the disciples, so that "from now on" they will see the Father because they will recognize Jesus more fully as both the representative and the representation of the Father (see comments on 2:17-22; 12:16, 44-50).

Jesus' statement "The one who has seen me has seen the Father" (v. 9) does not simply conflate the identities of the Father and the Son. Throughout the Gospel, Jesus has identified himself as the Son, the representative of God who speaks the words and does the life-giving works of the Father. To see the works of Jesus is to see the works of God because "the one who is sent is like the one who sent him" (m. Ber. 5.5; see comments on 5:28-29; 13:16-20). But that is not all. Because the Father dwells in him, Jesus is also the representation of the Father. Thus, to see him is to see the Father. Indeed, no one sees God directly—that is, no one but the Son (1:18; 5:37; 6:46). Yet there remains a true, if mediated, vision of the Father through the Son, because the Son does the Father's work, and because Father and Son mutually dwell in one another (14:11). To see the works of Jesus is to see the work of God; to see the Son is to see the one in whom the Father dwells and who dwells in the Father. Because of their unity in work and their mutual indwelling, because they are one (10:30), to see the Son is to see the Father.

68. Rightly, Moberly 2008.

14:12-31 Jesus' Promises to His Disciples

Jesus continues his Farewell Discourse with a series of promises to his disciples:

- Those who believe in me will do greater works than I have done.
- I will do whatever you ask in my name.
- I will petition the Father, and he will give you another Paraclete, who will be with you and will teach you.
- I will not leave you orphans, but I will come to you.
- Because I live, you also will live.
- I will love you and reveal myself to you.
- I leave you my peace.

Taken together, Jesus' words promise his continued presence and peace with the disciples and his responsiveness to their needs and requests. Even though he is indeed going away and will not be among the disciples as he was before, they may nevertheless continue to know him, to see him, to be assured that they will live with him, and to expect him to act on their behalf. While after his death and resurrection the mode of Jesus' presence with the disciples will change, the fundamental reality that he is with them, making himself known to them, will not change. The disciples must learn what it means to "follow" the crucified and risen Lord, but it is the same Lord that they follow. As Hoskyns memorably put it, "What Jesus is to the faith of the true Christian believer, He was in the flesh."⁶⁹ All subsequent generations of disciples are also included in Jesus' promise of his presence, life, and peace.

14:12 "Amen, amen, I tell you; whoever believes in me will do the works that I do, and will do even greater works, because I am going to the Father.
13 Indeed, whatever you ask in my name, this I will do, so that the Father might be glorified in the Son. 14 If you ask anything in my name, I will do it.

Jesus' Promises to His Disciples

15 "If you love me, keep my commandments. 16 And I will ask the Father, and he will give you another Paraclete, to be with you forever, 17 the Spirit of truth, which the world is not able to receive, because it does not see him or know him. You know him, because he remains with you and will be in you.

18 "I will not leave you orphans: I will come to you. 19 Yet a little while and the world will no longer see me, but you will see me. Because I live, you also will live. 20 On that day, you will know that I am in the Father and you are in me and I am in you.

21 "Whoever has my commands and keeps them is the one who loves me. Whoever loves me will be loved by my Father, and I will love them and reveal myself to them."

22 Judas, not Iscariot, said to him, "Lord, what shall happen that you will soon reveal yourself to us but not the world?"

23 Jesus answered, "Whoever loves me will keep my word, and my Father will love them, and we will come to them and make our home with them. 24 Whoever does not love me will not keep my words. And the word that you hear is not mine but belongs to the Father who sent me."

25 "I have said these things to you while I was with you. 26 And the Paraclete, the Holy Spirit, whom the Father will send in my name, will teach you all things and call to mind everything that I have said to you."

27 "Peace I leave you; my peace I give to you. I do not give to you as the world gives. Do not let your hearts be troubled or afraid.

28 "You have heard that I said to you, 'I am going away, and I am coming to you.' If you loved me, you would rejoice, because I am going to the Father, for the Father is greater than I. 29 And I have spoken these things to you before they happen, so that when they do happen, you will believe.

30 "I will not speak with you much longer, for the ruler of this world is coming. And he has no part in me, 31 but that the world may know that I love the Father, and that I do what the Father has commanded me, I do this.

"Rise; let us go from here."

14:12-14 Here Jesus makes two astonishing promises. First, he promises that those who believe in him will not only "do the works that I do," but that they will do "even greater works." Jesus' "work" or "works" includes all that he does or says. Elsewhere Jesus has already included others in his work (e.g., 9:4), so it is not surprising that he envisions the disciples as carrying on and furthering his "works," which are the works of the Father who abides in him (14:10). By analogy, the disciples will do Jesus' life-giving works only because

69. Hoskyns 35.