

Learning in the digital era – Who am I as an artist?

In my video I have added clips in which are meaningful to me and my work. I feel that as an artist I work a lot with studio work. This is something that I enjoy the most in photography as I feel it allows me to be most creative when capturing and creating my images.

However, I have begun to explore with my work outside of the studio. I take most of my inspiration from my surroundings. I stepped away from the portraits for most of my images as I really wanted to step out of my comfort zone and create more meaningful images. I enjoy going on long walks as there is a lot to take in. I find myself taking many images of things that stand out to me. Overtime I have learnt multiple new skills within photography. Experimenting with angles has become very important in my work as it helps me capture my subject from multiple different perspectives. When thinking about what inspires my work I took a look back on some of my past photoshoots and how each one is different to one another. Before going to university my work had zero to little meaning behind them as I was always focused on studio work and the artistic side of my images. That being said I have learnt how I can still create studio portraits with meaning and emotion behind them. I have realised that this is most important in photography and has improved my images over time. In this semester I have stepped out of my comfort zone and taken landscapes and environmental images. I wanted to show this in my video as I feel it has become important to my photography as it is more personal to me. I have edited my video using Inshot as I feel it is the best way for me to create my video to my highest potential as I feel it is easiest to use personally. I added transitions in between clips so that the video runs smoothly throughout. I wanted to add clips that mainly consisted of what I do in most of my work. The main set out of the clips in my video consists of the beach, the woods or the studio. This fits my work as I do a lot of studio work however recently I have taken more environmental images.
