What About You?

I want to be a tattoo artist after graduation, and outside of that I want to continue creating the hyper-feminine, pink illustrations I am currently. Since being a tattoo artist is self explanatory, I'd also like to do commissions of people's characters like I am currently. My dream is to own and run my own woman-only tattoo shop, a place where other women can feel comfortable and unjudged. This is because as someone who frequents tattoo shops, I understand how intimidating they can be.

Website Research

The pinnacle of Japanese web design, seiryu-kan.com features bright blue text riddled with random hyperlinks, outdated gradients in text boxes, and a myriad of other issues.

MAKING SOFTWARE

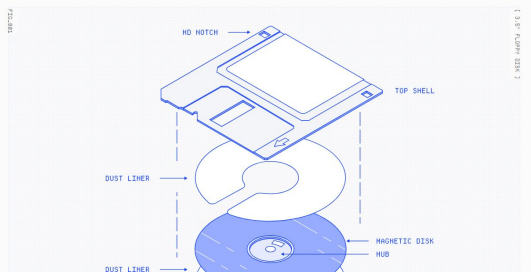

A reference manual for people who design and build software.
Written and illustrated by Dan Hollick.

Have you ever wondered how a touch screen knows you are touching it? Well, it has these layers of transparent metal electrodes embedded in the display. When your finger gets close to the screen it causes a disturbance in the magnetic field that the electrodes sense.

Because the electrodes are laid out on a grid, they can report back the x and y co-ordinates of the disturbance to the operating system. Pretty neat.

Or maybe you've wondered why we call it a Gaussian blur? When we

Based on my work and the client base I attract, I looked at other artists websites, as well as non-professional pages with a brief 'about me' section. I mostly wanted to collate a mood board of pink, hyper-decorated sites. I was also inspired by Lisa Frank, old internet fandom spaces, and other things that generally caught my eye. I essentially looked at things that already inspire my artwork. I was drawn to anything that appreciated and showed affection towards hyper-femininity and girlhood.
