

Me, myself and I.
Robyn Evans

Plan/ mind map

Link to video:

<https://youtu.be/dYGxX1PRqhs>

300-word evaluation/ overview

- For my three-minute video I decided to create a Timelapse of me drawing one of my most frequented styles of art, mandala/ dot work. I have been using these techniques ever since my GCSEs and they continue to be my favourite. They are satisfying to make, therapeutic, meditative and easy to display. The process of creating for me is drawing out a 20x20cm box (usually although the measurements can differ depending on the style or shape, I am going for) on the page, then a line down the center vertically, horizontally and diagonally across the page. After this I will mark a centimeter from the middle out on each line and form a pattern around these dots using them as guidelines. Once I have built up a pattern (in no particular order, I do not tend to plan the shape I just build it until the page is full enough unless specifically designing a piece for someone that has commissioned or requested so. Taking inspiration from my previous pieces, colours, flowers, geometric shapes, moods, music and other artists such as Hannah Pixie and Grace Neutral.) Once I am happy with the outline, I choose a colour pen to use which is usually black, however here I chose a dark and light blue. Here I am using the brand Staedtler's fine liners, however I do sometimes use dipping ink and a fountain style pen or pointed stick. Once the outline is done, I will let the ink dry, erase the pencil lines and dots that mark spaces and finally fill in the negative space with dot shading or solid colours. I am very happy with this piece although it could have been filled out a bit more. I decided to upload this on TikTok as it gives you sounds to add on top of videos and accepts a three-minute maximum.