Writing Reflectively

Description

For the past five weeks in this business studies module, I have been exposed to basic business ideas and principles. The learning was end-on, entailing an understanding of concepts and their application in classwork and group discussions. Every week was a continuation of the previous one, forming a continuous knowledge of business principles.

Feelings

At first, I was quite surprised by the volume of information offered and the range of topics covered. However, as days passed, I felt more and more confident, especially when I could implement the actual theory into practice by solving several business problems. The most encouraging factor was collaborative learning, which promoted unity and cooperation among peers.

Evaluation

The organization of the module ensured a good blend of theory and practical implications of the concepts presented. The incorporation of case studies was most beneficial, as concepts taught can be immediately put into practice in completing cases. Leal-Rodriguez and Albort-Morant (2019) state that this combination of theory and practice in business education positively impacts learning achievement and students' skills. Discussions helped broaden the views within the groups by raising awareness of the different perceptions and situations encountered.

Analysis

Reflecting on the experience, the challenging aspects of the course played the most crucial role in my learning. The need to connect theoretical frameworks to real business
