I like how the cut-outs look on this material as the scorch marks give a distressed look which I feel is quite fitting to my dementia idea. Also, when light is shone on it, the shadows show the scorch marks, another effect I like.
Also tried to etch onto the surface of the plastic which worked really well. However on this material the words show up better on a colour such as black.

More experiments with materials.

As cutting onto acetate didn't have the desired effect I tried to peel away the letters that had stuck to the mount board. When I did this, the black surface of the mount board peeled away in the shape of the letter leaving the indented white letter behind. As I only needed to remove a few letters I feel that this now looks very effective and links well with my concept of dementia and memory loss.

I like the effect that the corrugated cardboard has. This sample has an entirely different feel to it over the others as it is on a textured surface and also written in upper case. I also like the missing parts of the Rs and Os as it adds to the idea of 'loss'.

From this I will experiment on wood to see what effect it has on my typography. I think wood would be effective as it is textured and has more depth than flat coloured card.
