Response

There is only one thing, and it is perhaps, very specific to personal requirements, but I could suggest having one document, that has the list of readings required for each week, including optional, so that you can, map ahead, and also refer back during essay time, making this part of the coursework, graspable.

of course this is something the student could compile themselves, but it came to mind to suggest. I think it's all great.

I find Moodle as a platform quite confusing, there is a lot of information but it takes time to sort out what you need form the plethora of information.

This module was a great start for the MACAA course. The way in which the module was taught was extraordinary. I have also attended a master's course at LSE and if I compare the teaching process at both the places, I will any day rate the teaching of MACAA far better and more valuable. The online seminars were engaging, course materials were precious and the assessment process was like a spiritual journey for me. I felt fortunate and blessed while attending the module.

Thank you for your response
