

EMERGENCY PLAN

· As we are going to be filming an extreme sport in the middle of the mountains, there are many hazards and risks to be aware of, so we have to be 100% sure that the whole production is safe for every one. First of all, mountain biking is a very dangerous activity when taken to the limit, and it can also get dangerous for the people in charge of filming it; secondly, the fact that we are in a remote spot far away from the nearest hospital makes things difficult in case of an unexpected accident. We have to be prepared for the worst.

As the Main emergency plan, we are counting with the help of 2 members of the Mountain Rescue Division, who both have the license to pilot a helicopter that is stationed near by. In the Helicopter we have all the medical equipment required for any sort of accident that may happen during the shooting. It is also the fastest way of transport to a hospital.

· We are going to be filming in the middle of the wild nature, so we have to be prepared for any unexpected weather conditions, that may affect our health or the state of our equipment:

- We have to make sure we bring warm clothes with us in case of sudden temperature drop.
- Be prepared for high temperatures, bringing many liters of water and sun protection
- We will also need to bring waterproof cases for our cameras, and water boots in case it rains.

· The site we are going to be filming is a forest incline, which could give the risk of trees and branches falling on top of us or falling and roll downhill until the spot where we are. The fact that the floor might be wet and slippery from rain also increases the risk of trips and falls, and therefore sharp objects such as broken branches or rocks to cause wounds, specially to the professional mountain biker.

Again, we will have access to the helicopter with all the medical equipment inside, and also a fast way of transport to reach a hospital as soon as possible. In the Helicopter we have all sorts of rescue equipment and ropes.
