Common Assessment Criteria Applied	Marks Available	Marks Awarded
General Comments
A good demonstration of your newly found skills with regards to Windows/Linux CLI/Scripting. Windows side is fine, but Linux need the source of your scripts as the evidence/source files that have been submitted do not include the various .sh file. Only minor issue the rubric does indicate that you should have included some form of engagement with online certified course of your choice - no evidence is found	100	64
1. Engagement with Literature Skills
A decent research activity on the key functions of a typical OS - complete with cited references	20	14
2. Knowledge and Understanding Skills
From the evidence provided, it shows that you have a good understand on how scripting/CLI commands work on Windows/Linux	20	15
3. Cognitive and Intellectual Skills
Discussion about the functions of a typical os is find (considering the limitation of word count). Supporting images from the selected OS add to the discussion	10	7
4. Practical Application Skills
Although you have a set of CLI commands documented, there should be 10 per OS. Scripting for windows is fine, but you could have provided some form help to assist the end user. Although you have scripts from Linux, the .sh file script itself is not obvious from the supplied evidence. With regards to the various CLI elements, you should have started with a discussion on what you are planning, start with the help of the selected command and then demonstrate is use. Finally, rubric does hint at you getting involved with a online course - no evidence can be found	40	20
5. Transferable Skills for Life and Professional Practice
Generally, the presentation/structure of this report is of a good standard and hopefully you will take this structure onto future coursework elements. For completeness, you should be starting references/appendices on a new page	20	8
