I use WhatsApp to keep in touch with friends, family, and work mates. I also use it for advertising and communicating with potential clients and customers. Keeping all my chats in one place makes it super easy to handle everyday talk and sort out business plans on my phone.

Snoop is a money tracking tool that I use to see how much I spend on transport and other expenses. It automatically splits my spending into groups so I can track exactly where my cash goes. It makes it super easy to keep an eye on my daily budget and stay on track for the month. It saves me a lot of time as I can make changes on the go, and it's more convenient compared to a physical register.

I use the SumUp app at work to get payments from clients. I mainly use the app to invoice, keep track of payments, and report monthly invoices. This makes it very convenient because I can take quick card payments on the go and clear bookings instantly without looking up paperwork later. The app can also be installed onto payment terminals, and they can sync with the live app. This also allows me to instantly review any payment made from a client to the business.

There is another app that I use, the Cab Treasure app to manage booking allocations and track live driver locations. I use it to clear active jobs, schedule future bookings, and keep a clear history of all our shifts, which makes my job as a controller extremely convenient because I can run the entire dispatch system effortlessly from one screen without losing track of a single vehicle.

I use the wall street journal to keep up to date with current economics and media. I use this information to plan long term goals around my economic matters. This allows me to plan well into the future, and adjust goals based on daily news.
