Literature searching

What is a Literature Search?

“An exhaustive search for published information on a subject conducted systematically using all available bibliographic finding tools, aimed at locating as much existing material on the topic as possible, an important initial step in any serious research project.”

ODLIS – Online Dictionary for Library and Information Science. Copyright © 2004-2014 by Joan M. Reitz. All Rights Reserved.

Retrieved August 11, 2021: https://products.abc-clio.com/ODLIS/odlis_l.aspx#litsearch

Where to Start...

- Familiarise yourself with your topic and previous research
- Perform a scoping / preliminary search.
- This will allow you to identify articles, journals and key authors on your topic.
- Note any key terminology, phrases, ideas you find.

What is a Research Strategy?

DEFINE – YOUR TOPIC
OR QUESTION

IDENTIFY – KEY
AUTHORS, CONCEPTS
& KEYWORDS

FIND – SUITABLE
INFORMATION
SOURCES

SEARCH – REFINE &
REPEAT SEARCH

RECORD – BY REFERENCING
CORRECTLY

Explore Your Topic

- Books
- Journals
- Box of Broadcasts
- NewsBank
- Subject Databases
- Google Scholar (link to the library in settings)

- Consider currency, availability and context when choosing your topic.
- There must be enough written about a topic for you to be able to research and write about it in detail.
- If it is too recent, there may not be enough research
- If it is too old, the research may not be current enough.

Search Process

Search Operators

Phrase Searching & Terminology

Consider different terminology that may be used.

- Alternative words: Synonyms / Antonyms
- Phrase searching: Search for a phrase in quotations "exercise training"

Evaluating Articles Critically

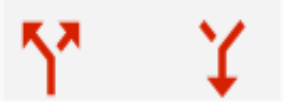

Things to look out for:

- Is it Peer-Reviewed?
- Does it contain stated research questions?
- How recent is it? What dates are shown on the references?
- Does it have a lot of references?
- Some databases will have records of Downloads, Shares, and how often it's been cited by others e.g. Springer, Science Direct, Google Scholar.

Tips

Finding a relevant article / book can lead to many more resources.

- Note key words / concepts / terminology used
- Check cited in and cited by
- Locate key journals and authors
- Look at the recommended or related research of a book or article
- Use filters: date, location, type of resource

Artstor

Diverse and interdisciplinary

With more than 2 million images* (and growing), scholars can easily examine wide-ranging material such as Native American art from the Smithsonian, treasures from the Louvre, and modern architectural plans from Columbia University.

Ideal for teaching and learning in any setting

Users can explore, discover, and interact with images from around the world using a suite of tools that encourage direct interaction with content, including zooming in on images to explore details, comparing and contrasting images side by side, and creating presentations with embedded text and annotations. These tools can help students engage with the material in a more immersive way, enhancing their learning experience in any instructional modality.

Trustworthy, rights-cleared, and contextualized

The images in Artstor are curated from reliable sources and have been rights-cleared for use in education and research — you are free to use them in classroom instruction and handouts, presentations, student assignments, and other noncommercial educational and scholarly activities.

Unlike results from commercial search engines, the images are accompanied by high-quality metadata from the collection catalogers, curators, institutions, and artists themselves. And, with Artstor's images integrated alongside JSTOR's library of full-text and other media, students can more easily situate the content in a historical, critical or cultural context, while educators and researchers can strengthen the depth and quality of their teaching and research, make innovative connections, and spark unexpected discoveries.
