Description

There were a total of 3 people in my team. Everyone in the gang played a specific role. A presentation on fund raising for start-ups influenced by many elements because it is a broad field. We created a detailed layout of the entire presentation before creating the first slide. We next go on to gathering data. We have concentrated on a number of AI-related topics, including how AI company works in line with the organization's vision and mission, the best methods for managing talent, employee engagement, and the main drivers of employee motivation. I'm very interested in learning about other cultures and their ideals. As a result, I concentrated on the significance of inclusion and diversity on any AI company start-ups. Everyone in the group was incredibly helpful. They didn't just prioritise their own job; they also utilised to assist others in finishing theirs. Every day, the team and I met to discuss how the job was going.

The slides must be captivating in order to make presentations that are effective. Unless the audience becomes interested in it. The committee assigned me the task of making the presentations visually appealing because I have a certificate in graphic design. I put a lot of effort into it and used infographics, visual aids, and humour to make the slide appealing. In total, our crew created 20 presentations on start-ups to provide a thorough understanding of topic. I was terrible at public speaking. I did stumble when I was saying it. While giving presentations, I had increased anxiety but still made an effort to interact with the audience. I listened intently to their inquiries and responded as best as I could.

Feelings

I never participated in team projects. I was thus quite enthusiastic about this. Everyone in the group was incredibly cordial. There were many members with more knowledge than I did. However, they never displayed any ego towards me. I received fair treatment and equal respect. Every member used to support one another and offer helpful criticism. As a result, the working environment remained upbeat throughout.

Each team member approaches a challenge in a unique way. To brush up on a subject, they employed a variety of methods. This has aided me in recognising areas of weakness in my strategy and in developing my skills. Through this group's assignment, I gained a sense of collaboration. I came to understand how teamwork and cooperation may increase a task's effectiveness.

Everyone was allowed to freely express their thoughts and opinions. I was very anxious before the presentations because this was my first time giving a presentation in front of so many people. However, I worked very hard to prepare for the presentation, and it helped me properly communicate my point to the audience. I occasionally get sidetracked throughout my five minutes of the presentation.

Evaluation

I spoke to the other members about their experiences after my presentation. When they deliver presentations for the first time, they experience the same level of anxiety. I felt happier as a result. I believe I have made a significant contribution to the success of our collective project. In addition, the experience taught me how any Startups company works in the real world to gauge their performance. This has helped me to better comprehend the subject.

Analysis

Working in a group has provided me with a lot of opportunity for personal development, according to my analysis. The climate of information sharing fostered by group work has been really beneficial to me. My communication abilities were lacking. But in order to make the presentation, I had to talk to other people, exchange ideas, and organise my efforts. This enhanced my capacity for communicating. One of the very few abilities I believe is important for success in any industry is time management. But my time management abilities were appalling. I used to frequently overlook crucial responsibilities. But I barely had three days to prepare my slides for the group project. I have to effectively manage my time in order to achieve those deadlines. I developed the practise of setting priorities for my job and juggling several things at once. This, I believe, will greatly aid me in advancing my career. In addition, I knew very little about how company activities worked. Now, I have a thorough understanding of it. This has expanded my employment options.

Thirty slides had to be created throughout the group project. It would take more than 23 minutes, as we can see. As a result, we must modify the plan and make it shorter by reducing the number of slides. I've learned through this that people may have to deal with unexpected changes or difficulties. They must be adaptive or flexible in order to cope with things in an efficient manner

Conclusion

I have therefore gained a lot of knowledge from the activity. To learn how to operate in a team, I improved my communication, time management, and public speaking skills. I believe there are a number of things I could do differently. Our group ought to pay more attention to storytelling, in my opinion. The presentation would become more relatable as a result. Additionally, I believe that the audience's mood was rather dreary while I was speaking. To cheer up the audience, I thought to have employed more humour. I also believe that the technical and intricate nature of the languages utilised in slides increased. As a result, the audience lacked enthusiasm and interest.

Action plan

After that, I would strive to create slides in straightforward language to make sure that the audience would retain the point I am trying to express. In the future, I would create a clear structure for my presentations that would divide them into specific sections with a logical flow. This will make it easier for my audience to understand and follow my message. I would exercise. To improve my public speaking, I would strive to be more sociable and engage in conversation with diverse individuals. I'd feel more assured if this.
