Professional Promotion: Emily Boyce

Harriet Popham front cover page is of her print designs which she is selling over her website. So this means the first thing a customer sees is her work to sell but also a sample of the kind of work she produces.

Her about page is quite concise as it is quite impactful from the use of one of her designs as a header. She goes on to talk about her opportunities and her education as well as what her works centres around, along side a picture of her from her home office. Which is great because it allows the consumer to see a personality behind the designs.

Harriet also has a whole page labelled 'Portfolio' with all her work on one page which looks great. Her work is visualised on to furniture, walls and products and really illustrates her designs for their intended purpose. I really like how her page looks and from other websites I've looked at Harriet's is by far the best very visual and fun.

Elizabeth Olwen's displays her website similarly to Harriet's however it is instantly less welcoming as her portfolio page is password protected. But she does display some of her work on her cover page such as visualisations onto products and just pattern flats. But it is very concise and in a grid formations rather than more free and fun.

Her about page is quite visually impactful with a very large picture of the designer and quite a large paragraph about her work and what inspires her. She also goes on to list her client list and where she and her work has featured.

She also has a shop where you can buy the designs that she has featured on her first page where it then takes you to another page to purchase.

She also shows her work where she has collaborated with brands and again visualises all her work. She definitely makes up for the lack of an open access portfolio.

Her type is very simple and understated which I like.

Abigail Borg website is like Elizabeth and Harriet's where they have their name in the top right corner and then to the left a list of the menu bar. She has a retro style type which is reflective of her work which could be said to quite 70's. She first has the header like Harriet where she has visualised her work onto a wall which instantly make an impression. From these designer website so far I can see that they are using every part of their website as an opportunity to showcase their designs.

She again has a page dedicated to her designs and her work which is concise and is in a grid like formation.

She also sells prints and designs from her website in a few places of her website which I don't like I think it is quite fuffy and could do with being all in one place of just in on drop down bar.

Jessica Hogarth website is very illustration based so it is instantly different in her layout where she has a few illustration designs on books and then just the print itself. But her first page is again all her work. Her about page is similar to Elizabeth's however it is far more chatty and her personality comes through more along with her inspiration for her design which are quite personal.

Again her portfolio is password protected but you do get the feel of her work on her front page. It looks as though she might have designed her own types and header as it is similar to her drawing style which is nice because it shows a designer identity instantly.

She again has a shop page where she is selling her work. Another thing I noticed is that all these designers were relatively easy to find during a search on Google because they've clearly all bought their web handle. Which eventually I would do especially if like these designers I was to go freelance.

Designed a web logo for social media's and my website. I have updated my website for the new project taking one of the coordinates as a background. The title is large which is still on going I quite like the impact though but it is cut off from the screen. The web menu is straight about which next goes into my about page. I have not yet fully updated this but since this research I know I need to expand on things like my inspiration and collaborations.

My current portfolio is not as clean as some of the other website but I think putting this into a grid formation would look much better. I also included the mood boards too for the designs. I have currently separated these out into into a drop down bar where each of the project are. I did this because last year I was looking at some of last years website and see that is what they did and I thought that it made navigating their website quite easy. I think when I start to have more projects under my belt I can then start thinking about having a whole page dedicated to my work.

Dear Ms. Matthews,

I came to learn about the internships at Peacocks through Ms. Cath Hammerton senior lecturer at University Wales Trinity St. David. I am interested in interning with you for a week over the summer because of its opportunity to stay in Wales and its Welsh roots as a brand. I am currently studying Surface Pattern Design BA Hons. I am proficient in researching, trend forecasting, curating mood boards and photoshop design. I am currently at the end of my second year of university and am looking to gain experience in industry and believe that Peacocks are a great place to start that experience as a welsh designer looking to stay in Wales. I have a range of skills I could bring to this role.

As mentioned above I am proficient at curating mood-boards and trend forecasting as this is a skill I often use to underpin each and every project. I thoroughly understand the importance of understanding the market and the consumer as this also drives the design process and outcome. This is an area I would love to know more about in industry and see that on a professional level.

In particular I have started to develop a Wix website where I have used this to build a body of work to publish and showcase some of my previous projects. This was part of a

In particular I have started to develop a Wix website where I have used this to build a body of work to publish and showcase some of my previous projects. This was part of a curriculum - based project I had completed in my second year. This has involved editing images of my work and ensuring that I am communicating my ideas clearly. As I realise the importance of promotion is key in showcasing the type of designer I am.

During my course I have also worked in external live projects this including the Idott Competition (where I was shortlisted) National Wool Museum Wales, St. Fagans National Museum of History and Orangebox. I particularly enjoyed working with St. Fagans as in this project I was able to work in the context of fashion and was inspired by the some of the ornaments there and Welsh history and culture. This is all documented on my site.

I have attached my CV for further information and my website/digital portfolio address is stated above if you would like to see some of my previous work. I would like to thank you for the opportunity and time taken to read this as I know that this is popular with many students.

I'll look forward to hearing from you shortly,

Many thanks,

Yours sincerely,

Emily Boyce.

The cover letter for my internship over the summer I did stress that I wanted to stay in Wales as I did my research and learnt that Peacocks in fact is a welsh brand. I knew that by saying that I am a welsh designer that they may appreciate the fact that they are one of the few brands in this field in Wales and that was an instant commonality. I had already spoken to Irene on the phone so I kind of had an idea about what I needed to be talking about such as skills, website, promotion to really put across my capabilities. Along with phone number and website address etc. The one thing that I would change is that I don't think they were able to access my website because I then had to send files of my work.

MONKI

That's it, that's the Lazy Loop.

But wait, there's more

Did you know that 100% of our cotton will be sustainably sourced, forever? It's true! One small step towards our goal to use only recycled or other sustainably sourced materials by 2030. But Monki Cares is more than just sustainable materials, it's about looking at how we can make our whole business more sustainable.

This is why we're committed to using better materials, why ALL our stores offer garment and textile recycling, why all our stores and offices are powered by renewable energy and, why we're aiming to become climate positive throughout our entire value chain by 2040.

Here we'll explain more about our goals, commitments, policies and partnerships. We're in this for the long-haul so we'll be updating this as we go. Stay tuned.

If you've any questions about what we do, then send us a mail at monkicare@monki.com.

WELCOME TO COLLUSION

This brand is for the coming age, shaped by, and for an audience who demand something different from fashion. For the last year, six collaborators — students, stylists, activists, image-makers and authors — have taken our label to places it could never have gone alone.

COLLUSION will constantly evolve, being as inclusive, collaborative and experimental as possible. Each year, we'll bring in more creatives from our audience to work with, continuously reimagining and reshaping what COLLUSION could be.

We also stick to our principles — ones that we think you might have too. COLLUSION is animal-free and the majority of our cotton is sustainably sourced. Our sizing is inclusive. We're unafraid to demand something different. We believe in collaboration. And we believe in making clothes that celebrate the people who wear them.

COLLUSION is exclusive to ASOS.

OUR VISION

At RIXO our vision is to create vintage inspired one-off pieces for the modern woman to wear with confidence, on multiple occasions for multiple uses, to feel the best version of herself. The founders love nothing more than seeing their global #HumansOfRixo styling designs in their own way, be it with trainers or heels, on a beach or in the city! Since the launch of the first hand painted print in 2015 by the founders themselves, unique prints play a large part of the RIXO range.

No piece is mass produced and our family run, small suppliers are very close to the girls, both personally and professionally.

INSPIRATION

Inspiration is everywhere for both founders, Henrietta and Orlagh.

They get goosebumps and a thrill of excitement when they are at vintage fairs, flea markets, charity shops and auctions together! The girls are both so passionate about vintage clothing, styling, imagery that some might say they are borderline hoarders, as they travel the world together and always make time for vintage trawling endlessly. Since setting up, they have always styled RIXO pieces on shoots with their very own vintage collection and have now expanded this into RIXO accessories.

Reaffirming the values that Paul set down in 1970, 'classic with a twist' remains the guiding principle of the company.

Paul's saying, that 'you can find inspiration in everything', means that references are eclectic, coming from high art and everyday life. Each Paul Smith design is underpinned by a dry British sense of humour: quirky but not frivolous, eccentric but not silly.

Happily positioned between high fashion and formalwear, while taking reference from both, Paul Smith has always been proud to stand apart.

The History of Lazy Oaf

Read More —

Illustrator and designer Gemma Shiell, 37, is the creative mastermind behind independent British street wear label Lazy Oaf. Founding the brand straight out of University in 2001, Gemma has taken Lazy Oaf from a stall in Spitalfields and hand printing t-shirts in her Dad's garage, to a flagship boutique in London's Soho, a hugely successful web store and over 260 stockists worldwide - having grown the company with no outside investment.

Led by Gemma, Lazy Oaf focuses on driving irreverence into everything it does - creating pieces that play on the brand's warped sense of humour. Her attitude of poking fun and not taking anything too seriously is carried through the whole design ethos, continually inspired by youth nostalgia, teenage rebellion and a sense of apathy towards conforming to the norm.

In addition to seasonal collections, Gemma has steered Lazy Oaf to work on special collaboration projects with some of her favourite artists and creatives - from YouTube phenomena Don't Hug Me I'm Scared and other independent brands (Poppy Lissiman, JuJu Shoes) to high concept collaborations with the likes of DC Comics, Warner Brothers and Dreamworks (Batman, Looney Tunes, Garfield and Casper) ☺
