Comments:

In this essay, you present well sustained arguments, developed on the basis of critical examination of the relevant arguments & you have successfully incorporated modern scholarship. The selection of sources itself is quite a difficult task with regards to this particular essay question - the question is much more richer than it might appear, but you've done an excellent job at structuring & presenting material in a way that focuses on the question & leads to a solid, plausible conclusion. That said, your discussion of the 'classifications' of knowledge does need some further thought, particularly the claim that observational

Mohamad El Katouni

Knowledge requires abstract thinking, & the claim that 'for knowledge to be useful in itself should have intrinsic value' (you are mixing up instrumental & intrinsic value here, so reconsider your presentation of ideas in the light of what you go on to argue later)
* Very well written abstract and, overall, a very good piece of work.
