5) Potential

On 3rd we talk about Creative Vision, individual design signature & creative voice ... this is your "inferring narrative". This exercise waits for you to go deeper than your project narrative and tune in to YOU too. What is your NARRATIVE? Let's unpick.

The tasks will be given at random and will tap in to the recall that will prompt your ASPIRATION NARRATIVE as well as your PROJECT NARRATIVE.

These are deliberately reflective, Motivational and sometimes light-hearted. The playful way in which the thinking process is triggered will aid spontaneity and gut responses.

Feeling is important.
Say it with words,
they only need to have meaning to you at this stage. The formed up thinking comes later.

Describe, get flowery, invest, go deep, let yourself feel, believe, empower, power up.

Think. Be thoughtful. But don't over think it!!

narraTivE

Why is your NARRATIVE important? — you need to be able to tell the world your story.

You are poised to launch yourselves into the graduate sphere, the highly competitive world of work; the design world.

At this point, to many, you and your work will become synonymous. The alignment of your work and your sense of self can be a highly rewarding realisation; empowering, enlightening.

This clarity of message will also enable clearer communication to your potential audiences, collaborators, employers, colleagues & fellow creatives.

Where do you and your work cross over?
How can your work be more you?
How can you be more your work?

There is no desired outcome; a right or wrong.
The quest is simply one of understanding, familiarity and ownership of your own narratives.

Make them read the story you want to tell.

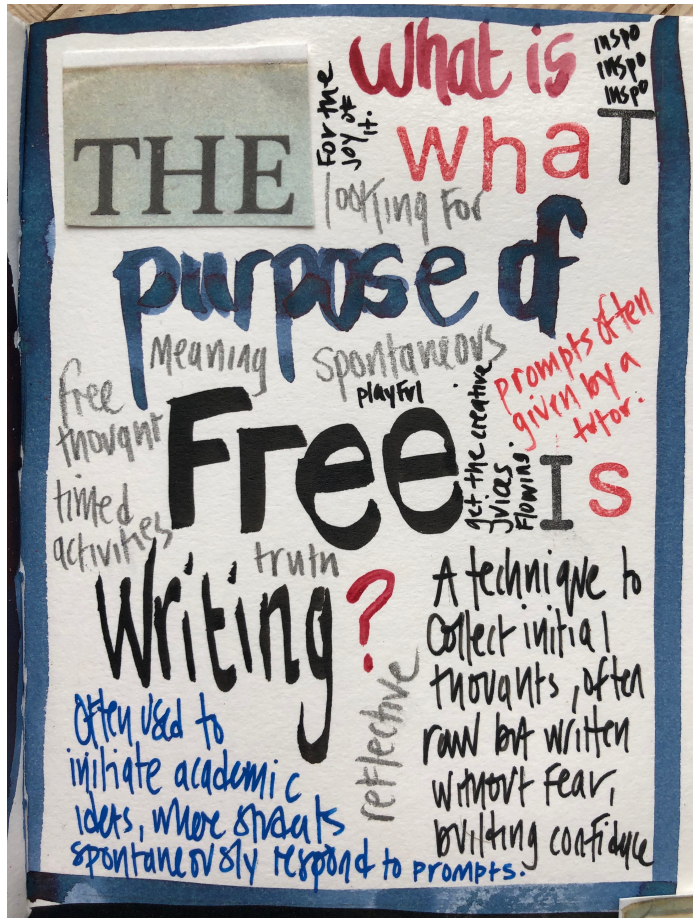

You choose the character you want to play.

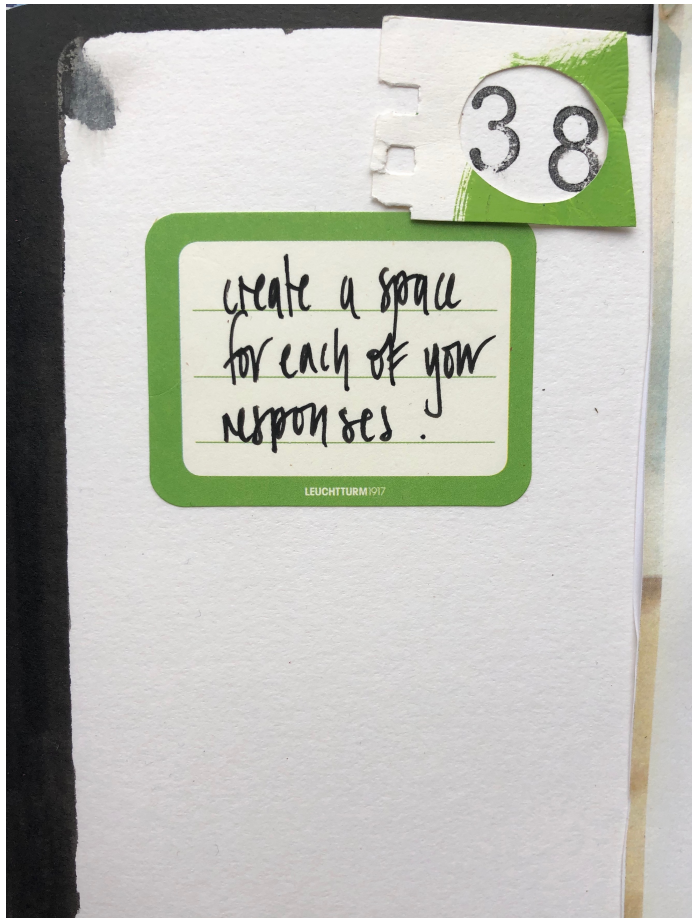

You decide the adventures you will go on.

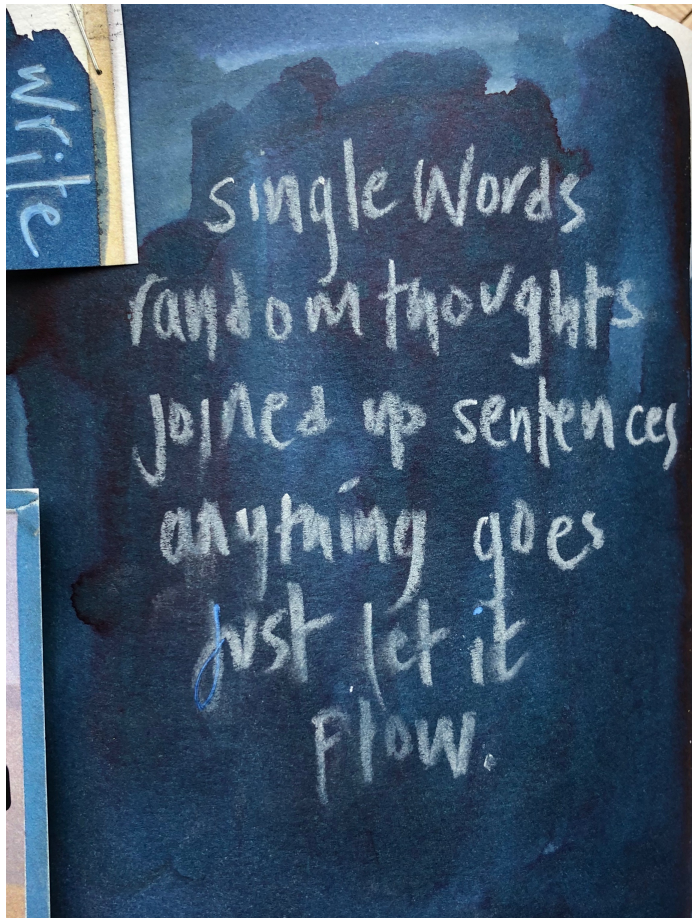

You design the happy ending.

White-fronted Goose (above)
Pink-footed Goose (below)

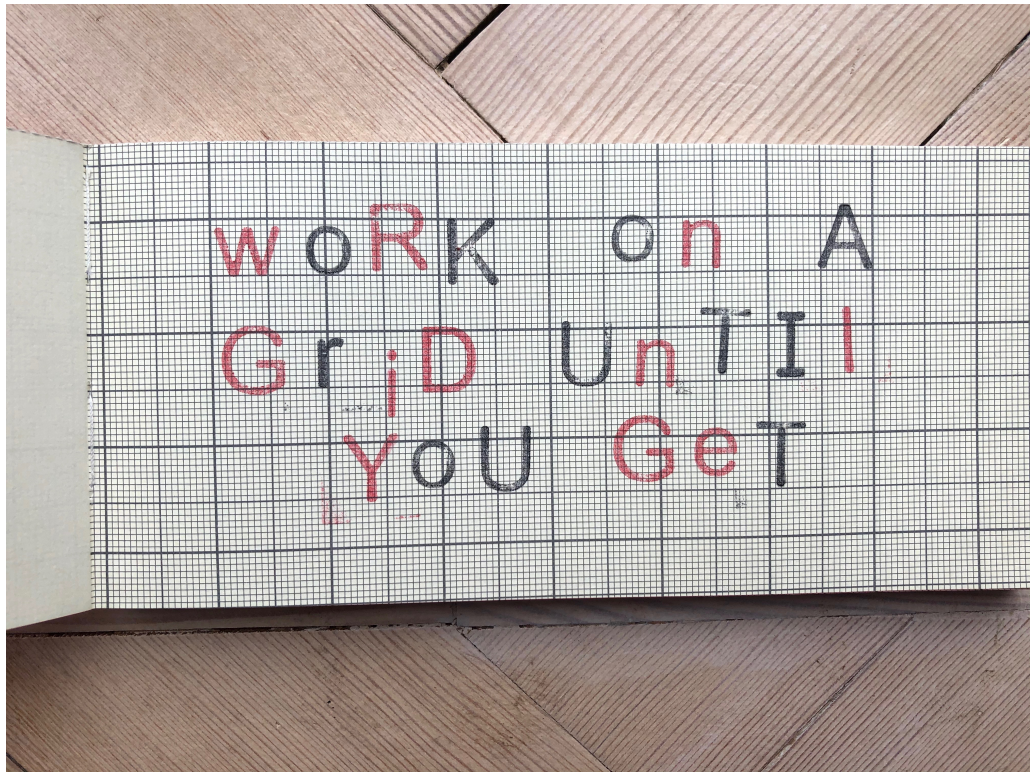

Although the Grey Geese are all rather alike, there are certain points to look for in order to tell them apart. The Grey Lag is usually the largest, the head and neck being the same colour as the body, the bill orange, the legs flesh-coloured and the breast having a few dark spots. The White-fronted Goose is darker in general colour, barred with black below, and has a pink bill and orange feet. There is also a white area at the base of the bill which extends over the front of the face. The Pink-footed Goose has a dark head and neck, a small pink and black bill, and pink legs. General habits of these Grey Geese are the same, and all are winter visitors.

The White-fronted Goose breeds in Siberia and the Arctic areas of North America, migrating as far as the Mediterranean in winter. Its cry is somewhat higher pitched than that of other Grey Geese, louder, with a sort of laughing sound. It is said to be a little tamer.

The Pink-footed Goose nests in Iceland, Greenland and Spitzbergen. In the winter it is found chiefly on our east coast, although, like many geese, it also occurs on the River Severn.

Recognition of all Grey Geese is difficult owing to the variations in size and plumage, not only in young birds but also in adults.
