My images are a set of tree reflections on water. The images clearly set on an open water setting of which by the breaks in water clearly shows that the weather was windy creating a very different effect for the final image rather than a still reflection.

My images consist of water reflections using a natural landscape of trees that have an open body of water. Here you can clearly see the weather changing the perspective and having a natural effect on the outcome of the final image.

The idea is to present nature and how through different aspects of nature and natural environments and weather can change the perspective or in this case the image due to the waves and breaks of the water create a more dark, chaotic image that without the breaks in water would be a calmer subtle environment. The colours used are those of natural lighting that comes from natural sources that are presented through the trees the reflections of the water and how they create a contrast between the blue skies, the green grass and the trees themselves all bouncing off each other creating an impactful image.

The lighting and overall shadow affect these images crest is a sense of chaos. This is as mentioned due to how the images are presented due to the natural waves of the water breaking up what would in other cases be a calm relaxing scenery. This creates the depth and mood of the imagery as it opens a different perspective of how nature can change not just the mindset but the way in which you view. Metaphorically could imply the way how things may not be as they seem and view things differently in the real world.

Due to the presentation, you get the feeling of the waves crashing against the waterfront giving you a setting full of natural sounds regarding nature and scenery that comes with it such as birds in the trees, hearing the water particles bouncing off each other. This perspective also may imply and give the impression of a calm relaxing scene where you can just sit relax and enjoy the natural sounds of nature. Exposure in these images is very little as you can see the natural light is very minimal due to the shadows breaking off from the trees. The only light breaking through is coming through branches and that of what is reflected of the sky in the water, which in turn helps keep the images composition within the final image. This is through the contrast of colours from dark and light that help add to the atmosphere and overall depth and emphasis around the entire exhibition of images and how they have been presented.

Other images included present themselves as the calmness that comes with nature. You can see this through the branches that reflect through the water reflecting from the clear skies. More so this is shown through the orange of what is reflecting from the sunset over the waters giving a sense of peace. In these images there is a clear sense of colour and exposure as more natural light is at show as opposed to those with the darkness of the trees where light is limited.

Overall, I feel that I achieved my aim as my images create a sense of emotion and tell an overall story of nature. In return this creates emotion to the viewer as it clearly shows a different state of matter how nature can appear in different aspects of its beauty.

The image is effective as it intends on its purpose to highlight how different perspectives can portray and change the outcome. In this sense nature is used as a natural source.
