

Slide 1 - Temporary accommodation can have a highly negative impact of children's education. Children living in temporary accommodation, particularly those experiencing homelessness often have to move school's multiple times which will interfere with the child's stability. By having negative educational disruptions caused by temporary accommodation, it could lead to reduced educational attainment and limited future opportunities.

Slide 2 - Temporary accommodation can make children/young adults feel isolated. Lack of social interaction can also lead to feelings of insecurity. They can feel anxiety and embarrassment that they don't have a stable home or family. Children in temporary accommodation may feel isolated from their peers and struggle to form social connections, which can negatively impact their emotional well-being and development.

The instability and stress of living in temporary accommodation can contribute to mental health

References

- https://www.rch.org.au/kidsinfo/fact_sheets/Nutrition_older_children/#:~:text=A%20lack%20of%20whole%20fruits,heart%20disease%20later%20in%20life.
- <https://www.nhs.uk/conditions/malnutrition/causes/>
- Harding, J. and Irving, A., 2014. Anti-Social Behaviour among Homeless People: Assumptions or Reality?. In Anti-social Behaviour in Britain: Victorian and Contemporary Perspectives(pp. 155-165). London: Palgrave Macmillan UK.
- Scott, J., 2000. Homelessness and mental health. Principles of Medical Biology, 14, pp.487-498.
- <https://www.crisis.org.uk/ending-homelessness/key-homelessness-policy-areas/health-and-wellbeing/mental-health/>
- <https://www.mind.org.uk/information-support/tips-for-everyday-living/housing-and-mental-health/homelessness-housing-support-and-mental-health/>